Greece to Surrender Aged Fugitive to U. S. Officials.

Martin Ordered To Quit Canada

Samuel Probably Will Be Put on First Boat to America.

(Copyright, 1934, by the Associated Press.)

Athens, March 16 (AP).—Samuel Insull, whose attempt to escape on a Greek tramp steamer was frustrated today by government officials, will be arrested immediately on his return tomorrow and turned over to American authorities.

He probably will be placed on the first America-bound steamer, it was indicated officially tonight, or, if any delay threatens such a course, he will be sent directly across the border within 24 hours.

His younger brother and associate, Martin J. Insull, was today ordered extradited from Canada to the United States to be tried on similar accusations.

Samuel Insull, wanted in the United States to face embezzlement and larceny charges, was near the Island of Crete when authorities established contact by wireless with his boat, the freighter Maiotis, and ordered its master to turn about.

Destroyer to Meet Boat.

The Greek destroyer Ira was dispatched to meet the Maiotis on her return to Greek waters.

Mrs. Insull and the governess she brought to Greece also were expected to be hustled out of the country with Insull.

His arrest on landing will be on a technical charge of violating the port code, it was learned, on the grounds that the Maiotis is a cargo boat and has no right to carry passengers.

It was reported Insull chartered the boat at a cost of $10,000.

Mrs. Insull declared her husband merely was carrying out the Greek government's orders that he leave the country. She said if he left secretly, it was because he feared to fall into American hands.

How the former Chicagoan was traced to the freighter was disclosed tonight by police, who said his whereabouts were discovered through questioning of an unnamed person last night and the interception of a telegram this morning from London.

Had Rumanian Visa.

It was learned that Insull had obtained a Rumanian visa for his traveling papers. It was believed it was secured through a resident of Bucharest.

The captain of Maiotis, meanwhile, in a wireless message to the marine ministry, expressed fear Insull might try to commit suicide. The minister replied the captain would be held responsible.

While the Maiotis steamed back to Piraeus, where she is due tomor-

His Taste for Cheese Traps Man in Theft

March 16 (AP).—When Sheriff Robert Roche was called to investigate the burglary of a store at Doylestown he found only one clew—a freshly bitten piece of cheese.

He arrested John McMann and his cousin, Russell McMann, but they denied the charge. A dentist said the marks in the cheese matched John's teeth and he confessed, exonerating Russell.

2,000 Killed As Tribesmen Wipe Out City

British Envoys Slain in Turkestan; Consulate Fired Upon.

Moscow, March 16 (AP).—Several members of the British consulate's staff tonight were reported killed or wounded, and 2,000 Uygurs, comprising most of the civil population of the town of Kashgar in Sinkiang, Chinese Turkestan, were massacred in firce fighting between rebellious Tungan natives and forces of the newly proclaimed "independent government."

This information was contained in reports from Tashkent.

Kashgar itself virtually was sacked during the combat, which occurred when Tungan detachments attacked the town and rescued a garrison of Tungans which was besieged in a fortress there by independent government troops.

The latter forces, retreating after a counter attack, sought refuge near the British consulate, which was fired on by Tungans, with a number of fatalities.

Government troops joined scattered detachments under the Emir of Chotan and occupied Jarkent, while groups of Uygurs and Kirghiz, supporting the independent government forces, took positions on roads and cut off Kashgar.

Banghart, Touhy Aid, Starts 99-Year Term

Joliet, Ill., March 16 (AP).—Basil Banghart, the fourth Touhy gangster to earn a long sentence for the kidnaping of John Factor, wealthy promoter, was hustled to Joliet Prison today to start a 99-year term.

Banghart was sentenced formally by Judge Walter P. Steffen. Five squads of Cook County deputies then delivered him to the prison.

Don't Tell Funny Tales On Nazis, Police Warn

Gotha, Germany, March 16 (AP).—Orders were issued by the police today that the telling of funny stories about members of the government must cease.

Police officials said contemptuous remarks had been made about Nazi leaders, and that persons circulating such stories would be arrested.

Arizona River Guard Sends Mosquito SOS

The insects scored the first offensive and Maj. F. I. Pomeroy, sent a radio appeal to Phoenix for mosquito netting.

Peery Selects Liquor Board

S. H. Tyler, McCall Frazier and R. McC. Bullington Are Appointed.

Richmond, March 16 (AP).—Gov. Perry today named the three-man board which will launch Virginia's new alcoholic beverage-control system next Thursday.

Members are S. Heth Tyler, lawyer, and former Mayor of Norfolk; R. McC. Bullington, Richmond business man, and T. McCall Frazier, director of the State division of motor vehicles.

Mr. Tyler, who will serve as chairman, was appointed for one year. Mr. Bullington was named for three years, and Mr. Frazier for five years. Upon the expiration of the initial terms each subsequent appointment will be for a term of five years. The salary of each was set at $7,500, subject to present and future State salary cuts.

Under the law, the board, with board powers, will establish a dual control, with a State dispensary system for hard liquor, and permits for the sale of wines and beers.

Gov. Peery announced that John Q. Rhodes, member of the House of Delegates from Louisa, had been chosen to succeed Frazier as director of the motor vehicle division.

Couldn't Kill Dictators; 4,000 See Him Kill Self

Paris, March 16 (AP).—Despondency because "it was mathematically impossible to destroy" Mussolini, Hitler and Stalin, was said by French police tonight to have caused the suicide of Paolo Bonfanti.

He shot himself in the head at a meeting of 4,000 Communists last night in protest against the Stavisky scandal. He was an Italian. Police reported finding two letters in which Bonfanti declared himself an anarchist.

Death of Pal Spurs Search For Dillinger

Aid in Escape Is Killed in Michigan Battle; 3 Officers Shot.

Hunt Spreads to Canada as Bandit Is Revealed Near Border River.

Port Huron, Mich., March 16 (AP).—John Dillinger's colored aid in his wooden-gun escape from an Indiana jail, was dead tonight—the victim of his own boasting and the guns of four St. Clair County officers—and the trail of the fugitive "cop killer" again was hot.

Herbert Youngblood, facing a murder charge when he accompanied Dillinger in a break from the Crown Point (Ind.) jail, March 3, died this afternoon a few hours after he had shot it out with Sheriff William L. Van Antwerp and three deputies. They had gone in search of a colored man who boasted of a successful jail break, and cornered Youngblood in a small store.

Two of the deputies—Undersheriff Charles Cavanaugh and Howard Lohr—were wounded seriously; Sheriff Van Antwerp received a bullet in one arm, but from his hospital bed he directed the search for Dillinger who, Youngblood said, he had seen last night.

Ontario's Police Join Search.

In Michigan and Ontario police were patrolling the highways, for the outlaw bank robber was variously reported speeding toward Detroit with two men, in a small automobile, and to have crossed the St. Clair River into Canada in a rowboat.

Assisting were Capt. Matt Leach, of the Indiana State Police, who was in Detroit when today's shooting occurred, and John L. Murphy, an agent of the United States Department of Investigation. Four officers from Crown Point, Ind., left for Port Huron as soon as word of the latest development was received.

Coincident with the killing of Youngblood came word from Indiana that Ernest Blunk, a Crown Point deputy whom Dillinger forced to accompany him in his flight, would attempt to prove that the desperado had a .45-caliber automatic pistol, instead of a wooden gun carved from a broom handle, when he made his break.

Faces Early Trial.

Blunk, who faces an early trial on a charge of aiding in the escape, was quoted as saying that Dillinger used the wooden gun only to conceal assistance given him from the outside in smuggling a real gun into the jail.

"Dillinger showed me a wooden

Treasury Pleased As Income Taxes Show Sharp Rise

Secretary Morgenthau yesterday gave President Roosevelt a gratifying report on income tax receipts, saying for the first quarter of the year they were well above estimates and far more than a year ago, the Associated Press reported.

Payments to the close of business March 15, the day when all returns were due, were $147,794,000.

In announcing this figure on the basis of telegraphic reports from collectors, the Treasury said corresponding collections last year were $99,847,000.

In 1933, however, the date for filing returns was extended from March 15 to March 31 because of the bank holiday.

Treasury estimates of income tax payments for March are $250,000,000 as compared with $174,000,000 last March.

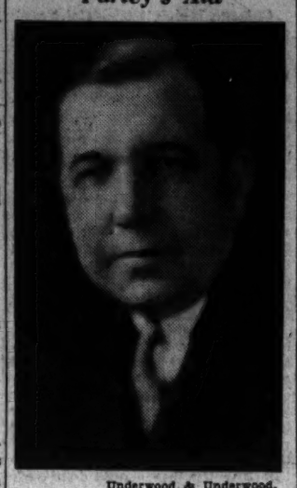
Farley's Aid



Underwood & Underwood.

EMIL HURJA, storm center in PWA, who was designated as assistant chairman of the Democratic National Committee by Farley yesterday.

Hurja Resigns PWA Office To Aid Farley

By Raymond Clapper.

Another move in the reorganization of the Democratic National Committee was made last night when Chairman James A. Farley designated as his assistant Emil Hurja, one of his former campaign lieutenants, who has for months been a patronage storm center in the Public Works Administration.

Drafting of Mr. Hurja for this committee headquarters post will relieve Farley of much detail work and was construed as an indication that the Postmaster General will continue to head the Democratic National committee for some time to come.

Earlier this week Chairman Farley found a new party treasurer in Walter J. Cummings, chairman of the Continental Illinois Bank & Trust Co., of Chicago.

With these two recruits, the Democratic National chairman has begun to reform his organization after a general decimation due to the White House rule against officials of the National committee holding public office or representing private clients before Government departments.

Farley Seeks Successor.

Frank C. Walker resigned as party treasurer to direct the National Emergency Council, and Robert Jackson resigned as secretary because he wished to continue his Washington law practice. Mr. Farley himself expects to resign when a successor has been found, but indications are this will not be for some months.

Mr. Hurja will take over his National committee work April 1. Secretary of Interior Ickes yesterday announced the resignation of Mr. Hurja as his administrative assistant in the Public Works Administration. The letter in which Mr. Ickes accepted the resignation gave no hint of the tension which existed when, some months ago,

Bank Guard Jobs Plan for Veterans

Work for 100,000 Seen Under CWA Funds.

Norfolk, Va., March 16 (Spl.).—Two war veterans as guards for every National bank in the country is proposed in a plan launched last night by Norfolk Post No. 392, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Edward G. Byrd, post commander, says such a plan would provide employment for 100,000 veterans and assure banks added protection against bandits. The money for the proposed army of bank guards could be obtained from CWA funds, he says.

The idea originated with W. Bruce Shafer, jr. Telegrams to posts all over the country were sent out today advising of the action.

H. O. Stone Men Guilty Again of Stock Fraud

Chicago, March 16 (AP).—Five former officers of the real estate investment house of H. O. Stone & Company were convicted today for the second time of using the mails to defraud investors.

They had obtained a new trial upon appealing their first conviction, but lost again as the Government rebuilt for a new jury its mass of evidence that the officers had knowingly sold worthless stock to the public and inveigled some investors to trade other bonds for company securities.

Lindy Terms Mail Policy Un-American

Famed Flier Assails Cancellations as Unjust Move.

Army Not Fitted, He Says; Chamberlin Raps Planes.

(Associated Press.)

Charles A. Lindbergh's excoriation of the Administration's air-mail bill as "un-American" before a Senate committee yesterday was followed by testimony of another famous aviator, Clarence D. Chamberlin, that two lines which formerly held air-mail contracts, had flown passenger planes he considered unsafe.

Chamberlin said the companies were Eastern Air Transport and United Air Lines. He added that the ships which he thought were "unsuitable for passenger flying" had been replaced by better craft.

The witness agreed with Lindbergh that the section which would bar the companies whose contracts were scrapped from new awards if they pressed claims against the Government should be removed from the bill.

It was this provision which Lindbergh termed "as contrary to American liberty as anything I have ever seen."

The elimination of this section is regarded by Postoffice Committee members as a certainty.

Violation of Rights.

Lindbergh also said he felt the cancellation of the contracts "without permitting the companies a hearing violated fundamental American rights."

Chamberlin, however, told Senator La Follette, of Wisconsin, "there seems to have been some reason for doing it; but if it was enough, I am not prepared to say."

Chamberlin said ships he thought were not "suitable for passenger work" were built by affiliates of Eastern Air Transport and United and that it was desirable "to divorce the air lines from manufacturing companies."

His testimony about the passenger planes was given reluctantly and only after Senator McGill (Democrat), Kansas, questioned him about an interview which appeared in a New York paper in which he made similar statements.

Chamberlin said he thought the Army fatalities were due to unsuitable equipment, bad weather and lack of time in which to prepare for the job.

Lindbergh Airs Views.

Lindbergh's views on the air mail episode have become well known since Postmaster General Farley announced recently that contracts were scrapped because of fraud.

His appearance yesterday, however, gave him an opportunity to tell the members of the Postoffice Commitee face to face what he thought of the measure before them and to discuss the cancellation and aviation in general.

Unattended and almost as boyish looking as in 1926 when he spanned

Smarting Police Nab 194 Autoists

Court's Laxity Criticism Spurs Traffic Bureau.

In answer to Judge McMahon's recent criticism of the Traffic Bureau, police yesterday turned in a record-breaking performance of 194 arrests for violation of parking regulations. This total was swelled to approximately 250 by arrests of precinct patrolmen.

Of the total, said to be the largest number posting collateral at Police Headquarters in the last three years, 34 were arrested for parking abreast and 33 for parking in restricted zones during rush hours.

Capt. Milton D. Smith, of the Traffic Bureau, said the motorists had been taking advantage of courtesies extended. The recent campaign started soon after Judge McMahon stated police were observing rather than enforcing traffic rules.

All Hail Mae West Corset Makers Needed

New York, March 16 (U.P.).—Mae West was acclaimed today by the Salvation Army as an "angel" to the unemployed.

Capt. Mabel Murray, head of the army's free employment bureau, didn't exactly voice approval of the voluptuous film star's pictures, but she did attribute a definite pick-up in work to Miss West.

The heavy demand for corset workers has resulted in "a phenomenal increase" in work placements by the Salvation Army Bureau, Capt. Murray said.

Georgia Raises Rail And Phone Assessment

Atlanta, March 16 (AP).—The State of Georgia struck back at railroads and telephone companies which had opposed rate reductions by increasing their valuations for tax purposes $145,551,938 over last year.

Assessments to 13 railroads and 10 telephone companies were increased $145,551,918.

House Insists On Restoration Of 10% of Pay

Also Sustains Its Cut in Senate Allowances to Veterans.

The House yesterday voted to sustain its action of Wednesday for the 5-and-5 Government pay restoration and a $90,000,000 increase in veterans' allowances in another stormy session and thereby sent the badly scarred independent offices bill to conference.

After suffering a series of defeats from the combination of Republicans and the veterans' bloc among the Democrats, House Democratic leaders were able to rally their forces sufficiently to stand by the compromise amendments although they were not all sure they would be acceptable to the President.

The House pay amendment was sustained by a vote of 225 to 161, but the veterans' amendment escaped defeat only by a hair's breadth, Speaker Rainey resorting to parliamentary tactics to delay announcing the vote long enough for House leaders to persuade a nonconforming member to change his vote.

The veterans' amendment, which cuts benefits $28,000,000 below the Senate amendment, was sustained by a vote of 190 to 189 only after Representative Kennedy (Democrat), of New York, changed his vote amid hoots and cheers.

Following the roll call on a motion offered by Representative Connery (Democrat), of Massachusetts, to recede on the veterans' amendment and to concur in the Senate

Erin Will Drown Shamrocks Today, But in Cup o' Tea

Dublin, March 16 (AP).—There will be fewer shamrocks and no whisky for St. Patrick's Day tomorrow, and Irishmen will be forced to "drown" the famous "green" in a cup of tea.

Shamrocks are scarce because the weather has been abnormally dry, but supplies of the leaf were being gathered today and there may be about enough to go around.

The traditional toast to the patron saint will have to be made differently. The Free State Legislature ordered all public houses closed from today to Sunday, and decreed that no liquor be available.

In Ulster there will be no dry laws and the shamrock can be soaked in real "crathur," as whisky is popularly called on St. Patrick's Day.

Eamon de Valera, president of the executive council of the Free State, will broadcast a message to the people of Irish descent in the United States Saturday night.

Government Must Back Up NRA, Is Labor Ultimatum.

President Seeks Arbitration Board

Code Leaders Called in Move to End Union Deadlock.

By Robert C. McManus.

Faced with an American Federation of Labor threat that it will call out 60,000 automobile workers in the Michigan area next Wednesday morning unless "the Government enforces the National Recovery Act," President Roosevelt moved behind the scenes yesterday to check the strike.

Through National Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson and his labor adviser, Edward F. McGrady, Roosevelt conveyed his views to both sides.

An unofficial report from Detroit stated that he already had asked certain persons whether they would serve on a board to consider grievances, before either workers or employers had approved the formation of such a board.

Johnson, trying to make the NRA machinery work after the National Labor Board had been swept almost completely from the picture, was on the long distance telephone yesterday in conferences with automobile executives, and was said to have succeeded in arranging a meeting of the executive committee of the Code Authority in New York Monday.

Arbitration Board Aim.

The committee, composed of Alvin Macauley, of the Packard company; Alfred T. Sloan, of General Motors, and Walter P. Chrysler will consider proposals to create an impartial arbitration board of review to pass on workers' claims of discrimination for union activities.

They also have been asked to agree to employes' elections, to determine what unions the workers prefer to have represent them.

"It seems very probable that proposals suggested by the labor board and the NRA, as fair to all might be agreed to by both sides," said Gen. Johnson, who had been conferring at intervals for 24 hours with McGrady, W. S. Knudsen, executive vice president of General Motors, and William S. Collins, the A. F. of L. organizer in the automobile area.

Declaring that "an automobile strike threatens the whole industry," Johnson added that "it seemed wise to all concerned to make an attempt to give the self-governing code authority of the whole industry an opportunity to act in its proper function to try to settle the trouble—not only as to two companies (Hudson and General Motors), and not only as to this occasion, but as to all companies

Auto Men Say Labor Control Menaces U. S.

Prepared to Join Steel, Other Industries to Fight Wagner Bill

Labor unions "would dominate American industrial life" under the Wagner employe bargaining bill, directors of the powerful National Automobile Chamber of Commerce charged last night in a bristling statement.

Detroit dispatches reported motor manufacturers were prepared to join steel industry executives and other industrialists in a finish fight on the measure of Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), New York, to perpetuate the National Labor Board and broaden its enforcement provisions.

Participating in the automobile blast were officials of such manufacturers as General Motors, Chrysler Motors, Packard, Hudson, Graham-Paige, Hup, Nash, Studebaker and Auburn.

Warns of Labor Revolt.

The automobile statement followed testimony before the Senate Labor Committee by Dr. Paul N. Douglas, NRA Consumers Advisory Board, that control of workers by capital amounted to "the economic essence of Fascism."

Another witness, John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, told the committee "continued denial and wretched evasion" of the collective bargaining clause of the recovery act "has caused unrest and will breed revolt apart from any question of wages."

Virtually every industrial worker

Cogswell Keeps Wills Post As Farley Ouster Plan Fails

The White House yesterday rescued Capt. Theodore Cogswell, District Register of Wills, from replacement by Mrs. Meta Fay, of Rochester, N. Y., prominent Democratic worker who had the backing of Postmaster General James A. Farley.

When the record had been consulted by the President, it was announced that he had decided to continue the office as a nonpartisan position, retaining Capt. Cogswell despite the recommendation of the Administration's patronage dispenser.

First intimation that the Administration might name Mrs. Fay, active in politics in Western New York, immediately aroused protest from District judges and members of the local bar association.

Capt. Cogswell, who began work in the office of register of wills 22 years ago, succeeded Corpl. James Tanner, who held the position for many years before him. He has a distinguished war record, having been severely wounded in the Argonne offensive—leading his men in an attack which was witnessed, incidentally, by Stephen T. Early, officer in the same outfit who is now a Presidential secretary.

While this post thus remained secure, the President is expected to nominate two others for District positions within the next few days. They are Richmond B Keech, until recently people's counsel, to membership on the Public Service Commission, and Dr. William J. Thompkins, editor of the Kansas City American, a Negro daily, to be District Recorder of Deeds.

Mr. Keech will fill the vacancy on the commission caused by the retirement of Maj. Gen. Mason M. Patrick. Thompkins, Democratic leader among Negroes of Kansas City, will replace Jefferson Coage, Hoover appointee from West Virginia.

Ball Faces Jail As Appeal Fails

Arlington Treasurer, Out on Bail, Is Refused Writ of Error.

The Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia ruled yesterday that E. Wade Ball, treasurer of Arlington County, Va., for 24 years, will have to serve two and a half years in the State Penitentiary.

According to an Associated Press dispatch from Richmond, he was refused a writ of error against his Arlington County Circuit Court sentence for misappropriation of $515,969.

Ball was convicted on the basis of an audit of his affairs by T. Coleman Andrews, then Virginia State auditor. If an appeal to the United States Supreme Court is not noted and Ball goes to the penitentiary at once, he will join there W. H. Duncan, former Arlington County clerk, who is serving a term for misappropriating funds.

Crandall Mackey, one of Ball's attorneys, said last night that certain constitutional questions had been brought into the case. He said that no decision on taking the case to the United States Supreme Court would be made until he consulted his colleague, Frank L. Ball, brother of the former treasurer.

Circuit Court Judge Walter T. McCarthy and Lawrence W. Douglas, Commonwealth's attorney, said they could say nothing about Ball's commitment until they have official word of the denial of the appeal.

Ball is free on bail, and whether or not he takes his case further, he probably will not be committed until the next circuit court session in April.

House Moves For Showdown On Silver Bills

By Robert C. Albright.

An immediate House showdown on silver legislation was foreseen last night as Treasury opposition to a white metal program drew sparks from the silver bloc and sharp comments from Speaker Rainey.

Slapping at Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., for a statement that some silver advocates are "not disinterested," Speaker Rainey slated a suspension vote Monday on both the Dies and Fiesinger silver bills.

At the same time, Secretary Morgenthau was asked by the House Coinage Committee to supply the names of persons interested in "silver speculation," in a resolution introduced by Representative John A. Martin (Democrat), Colorado.

Decision to recognize proponents of the Dies and Fiesinger silver bills Monday, under suspension of House rules, was reached by the Speaker at a conference with members of the Coinage Committee and the House silver bloc.

Either of the bills, providing widely divergent silver purchase programs, would require a two-thirds vote for passage.

Rainey Speaks Out.

Speaker Rainey minced no words when asked what he thought of Secretary Morgenthau's statement on silver legislation.

"I don't think much of it," he replied.

Headlines from morning papers such as "Silver Tumbles," "Wheat Drops," "Stock Market Reacts," provide a complete answer to Mr. Morgenthau, he said.

He declared there was no justification for the Secretary's statement, and expressed doubt that any Congressmen are "playing the market in silver."

Representative Martin tried to get preferential treatment for his resolution calling Morgenthau before the Coinage Committee. He failed, and said he would make another effort today. Rainey said he thought it was a "good resolution."

The resolution refers to published statements that the Treasury "has been making an investigation into silver holdings of advocates of silver legislation, and has found them not entirely disinterested." It adds:

"The expression of these views by the Secretary of the Treasury is prejudicial to silver legislation now pending in Congress and is calculated, although not intended, to reflect upon members of Congress who have identified themselves with such legislation."

35 at Parley.

About 35 members of the silver bloc and others attended the Rainey conference, including Chairman Andrew L. Somers, of the Coinage Committee, and Representative Martin Dies, of Texas, and William L. Fiesinger, of Ohio (Democrats), authors, respectively, of pending silver bills, both favorably reported by the Coinage Committee. Chairman Somers left the meeting early.

The Dies bill, which Speaker Rainey said stands the best chance of passage Monday, would set up a special board, comprising the President and the Secretaries of Commerce and Treasury, to negotiate with foreign countries for the purchase of American agriculture surpluses. Foreign purchasers would pay for the goods in silver bullion at a price not to exceed 25 per cent above the present market price.

The Fiesinger bill, which does not conflict with the Dies measure, permits purchase up to 1,500,000,000 ounces of silver at the market price, in an effort to restore 1926 commodity price levels. Under both measures certificates would be issued by the Treasury against the silver.

pitol while we were in the sheriff's car out on the road," a dispatch from Indianapolis quoted Blunk as saying in Crown Point, "but it did not look anything like the weapon we had in the jail." Blunk also was quoted as saying that Dillinger replied "they'd do as much for me," when asked whether he would attempt to free Harry Pierpont, Charles Makley and Russell Clark from the Lima, Ohio, jail where they were held on murder charges.

Realizing he was dying, Youngblood revealed his identity after he was taken to a hospital with six bullet wounds in the chest and abdomen. He said Dillinger and three other men had come to Port Huron with him.

With Three Companions.

He said he had seen Dillinger and three companions last night in a small automobile, and such a car, with either Indiana or Illinois licenses, was the focal point of tonight's search.

A description of the gun battle, which marked the end of the trail for Youngblood, was furnished by Deputy Sheriff Charles F. Lohrstorfer, who revealed the man lived up to his boasts of being a bad man in his own right by carrying two guns. It was the second gun with which he wounded his three captors, after Sheriff Van Antwerp had snatched the other one from him.

"I was stationed outside," Lohrstorfer related, "with a sawed-off shotgun and orders to shoot the man if he came out. The sheriff, Lehr and Cavanaugh went to the rear door of the store first, but it was locked, so they went in the front way. Youngblood was there and the sheriff asked him his name. He said it was 'William Jerry.'

Could See Gun.

"The sheriff could see he had a gun, and snatched it from his pocket. Then Youngblood drew another gun and started firing.

"Cavanaugh was hit first, and then the others, but they also were shooting, and brought him down. When Cavanaugh came out, supported by the sheriff, I went in and found the man on the floor. I handcuffed him, his hands behind his back, and stood over him until the ambulance arrived."

Officers were disposed to give more than passing credence to a report that Dillinger and two other men had been seen crossing the St. Clair River into Canada. The river is narrow here, and the crossing could be made quickly, they pointed out, offering the best method of escape.

row afternoon, there were other repercussions in the Insull affair.

Opposition political leaders attacked the police department for letting Insull slip through its fingers; Interior Minister Metaxas resigned because of it, and the public attitude changed from sympathy to impatience.

Two ships sail soon for the United States. The Aquitania, on a cruise, leaves in four days; the Italian Vulcania will pick up America-bound passengers at Piraeus March 24.

There was a possibility Insull may not know the fate awaiting him until the dingy little ship heaves within sight of the Greek port.

What once was marked sympathy for an old man who reputedly was suffering a variety of ailments, including a poorly-ticking heart and diabetes, now has apparently turned to open resentment, and the government, which once planned merely to deport him from Greece, tonight seemed determined that he must be sent only to the United States.

The owner of the Maiotis—listed in Lloyds Register as A. P. Sinodinos, of Piraeus—was arrested by police after it was learned the fugitive was aboard that craft, which sailed at 4 p. m. Wednesday.

Wireless Located Insull.

The locating of Insull came only after hours of efforts by wireless. Admiral Hadjikyriakos, marine minister, said the master of the Maiotis had agreed to turn back, because the government had determined to cut off Insull's flight.

Mrs. Insull and a friend, Mme. Couyoumjoglou, wife of a Bagdad date merchant, were detained at the police station all night, with no chance to sleep, but were allowed to go home under guard at 8 a. m.

Reports, meanwhile, that American Minister MacVeagh had protested to police against "the lack of vigilance," were denied today at the United States Legation.

3 Sisters Burned To Death in Home

Parents Away on Visit; Boy, 8, Breaks Back.

Georgetown, Del., March 16 (AP).—Three young sisters burned to death and their brother's back was broken when he leaped to safety last night, as fire destroyed their farm home. The dead were Viola, 13; Louise, 5, and Mary Frances Hudson, 2. Marshall Hudson, 8, is in a critical condition.

The parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Hudson, discovered the tragedy on return from a visit to a neighbor.

Marshall told physicians that Viola upset a lamp as the children were retiring.

New Orleans, March 16 (AP).—Federal marshals will board a train for St. Louis tonight, taking two confessed extortion plotters to face trial for threatening to kidnap the 3-year-old son of Louis A. Hager, St. Louis manufacturer.

Federal Judge Wayne G. Borah signed the order authorizing removal of the pair, Manuel Lopez, 33, former butler in the Hager home, and Andrew Haime, 27, to St. Louis.

Auto Union Organizer Found Dead by Road

Monroe, Mich., March 16 (AP).—Monroe County officers and Detroit detectives today sought a motive for the slaying of John L. Baelek, 24, Detroit automobile factory worker, whose body was found beside a road last night.

Baelek, who had been employed by the Hudson Motor Car Co. in Detroit, had been beaten and shot four times. Fifty application blanks for membership in the United Auto Workers of America Union were found in his pockets.

Roosevelt Acts to Avert Strike Of 60,000 in Auto Industry

nad other occasions that might arise."

Cites Business Gains.

"It would be deplorable if the strike were called," said Knudsen. "Business has been so good this year, and we have so many men at work. I want to assure you how we have tried to comply with the National Recovery Act."

Stripped of detail, the fight over the question of whether the Federation can break down the long resistance of the automobile industry, and, armed with Section 7 (a) of the Recovery act, enroll the workers in the A. F. of L. Employers who shortened the work week three days ago as Henry Ford announced return to his $5 a day wage, have tried determindly to head them off by forming company unions and works councils for their laborers.

The A. F. of L. men charge that these company organizations are dominated by the employers, and that Federation men have been discriminated against and fired because of their outside affiliations.

The manufacturers charge that A. F. of L. men use intimidation on their own part. They also deny that the Federation has enrolled any substantial percentage of the total automobile labor.

Refused by Employers.

In National Labor Board hearings two days ago Knudsen and others flatly declared they would not recognize a Federation union as such.

At A. F. of L. headquarters yesterday the spokesmen from the troubled area swarmed into a room for a conference with Collins. They were expected to leave for Detroit later with the report of their achivements here, which was to be presented to a mass meeting tomorrow night. Reports that an A. F. of L. man had been found slain in Detroit with federation pamphlets in his pockets had reached them a short time before.

After two hours, they emerged from the room. "I've got them to wait until Wednesday morning," said Collins, who was visibly excited. He declared that if the "Government does not enforce the recovery act," the workers will walk out until it does.

Says 60,000 Will Strike.

The labor spokesman said his organization could call out 60,000 men in Michigan, Wisconsin and Missouri automobile regions. He was asked if Matthew Smith, head of the Mechanics Educational Institute, a skilled workers' union not affiliated with A. F. of L., would call a walkout, too.

"Smith will go along with us," said Collins. "God knows how far this thing will go. Gen. Johnson said to me: 'Look me in the eye and tell me about this election. Have you got a majority?' I said if we didn't have we wouldn't want an election held."

Collins did not go into any more details on the "majority" of which he spoke. Exclusive of the Ford Co., which is not involved in the present dispute, there are about 250,000 workers in the industry.

Labor's Statement.

The Mechanics Educational Institute, led by Smith, a British labor leader of the Sydney Webb school, has about 15,000 members.

After the Detroit workers had gone, a statement was issued on their behalf at the federation offices. "At the hearing before the National Labor Board," it said, "we clearly demonstrated that we have done everything possible to conform to the letter and spirit of the National recovery act. We have organized for the purpose of collective bargaining with the employers, freely chosen our representatives and presented ourselves as the representatives of the employes to the managements. The General Motors and Hudson companies have refused to deal with us and refused to carry on collective bargaining. By the President's request we deferred action until we could present our case to the National Labor Board, in the hope that they could force the General Motors and Hudson companies to conform to the law.

"Instead of this, we heard the National Labor Board defied by the General Motors and Hudson companies. They refused to permit the board to hold an election so that we could prove that we represent the employes. If future events prove in any way to be a bar to the recovery program, the responsibility will rest squarely on the shoulders of those who have defied the Government."

Canada Orders Martin Insull Out of Country

Dominion Court Accepts "Prima Facie" Case of Theft.

Toronto, March 16 (AP).—Martin J. Insull, brother and associate of Samuel Insull in utilities companies once valued at $4,000,000,000, today was ordered extradited to the United States.

Chief Justice Sir William Muloch approved the order, after Insull appealed from a previous extradition document through which Cook County, Ill., seeks to bring him to trial on embezzlement and grand larceny charges.

In his judgment, Chief Justice Muloch said:

"Application for Insull's surrender to the United States for extradition was laid before Mr. Justice Kingstone, and he made an order to the effect that a prima facie case had been established against the accused in respect to theft."

The decision was considered an end to the months-long fight Insull has put up against a return to Chicago.

This was started nearly 17 months ago when he was arrested in Orilla, Ontario, after the collapse of the Utilities companies.

Insull, who attended today's court hearing, was subsequently held to await the arrival of American authorities.

The Justice Department said yesterday that Federal action against Martin Insull will be held in abeyance until Illinois charges against him are concluded, according to the Associated Press.

It was explained the treaty governing extradition from Canada says the authority seeking the extradition of a fugitive has sole right to try him.

U. S. to Condemn "Scotch" Whisky

Labels of American-Made Liquor Held Misleading.

Charging that the labels on 326 bottles of "Glenshire Scotch Whisky" were misleading, in that the contents were prepared in the United States and not in Scotland, the United States Government yesterdaty moved to condemn the liquor under the pure food and drugs act.

Assistant United States Attorney William Gallagher yesterdaty filed a petition asking that the District Supreme Court step into the case. He said that the liquor was shipped here by a New York concern March 4, and is in the possession of a local wine company.

Knox Attacks Wagner Bill

Hits Plan to Force Free Rein for Labor in Industries.

Chicago, March 16 (AP).—Col. Frank Knox, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, today attacked the Wagner bill, which he said was obviously "aimed at company unions, the open shop in industry, and in favor of the standard type of craft unions which constitute the American Federation of Labor."

Col. Knox prefaced his arguments against the bill before Congress with the statement that for 33 years he had been an employer of union labor, "an employer accustomed to deal with labor unions and uniformly working in harmony with them."

"My chief objection to the Wagner bill," Col. Knox said, "is that it attempts to do by compulsion what can only successfully be done by evolution and education. Neither the cause of economic justice nor the cause of economic recovery is promoted by the employment of force to compel men to do these things which they should do of their own free choice."

War Contract Inquiry Hears CCC Director

Fechner Denies That He Sought to Purchase Silverman Coats.

Further light was thrown yesterday on the dealings of Joseph Silverman, jr., New York trader, with the War Department.

Testifying before the House military affairs investigating committee, Robert Fechner, director of emergency conservation work elaborated upon his statements to the District grand jury last week.

It also was indicated the committee may be able to make public shortly the special report made by the grand jury after it refused to return indictments for conspiracy to defraud the Government on War Department contracts.

Fechner was questioned regarding the now famous deal in raincoats, which the trader hoped to sell back to the Army at an unusual profit. The CCC director had told the grand jurors he recommended purchase of Silverman's supplies to effect a "substantial saving."

Changes Testimony.

Yesterday Fechner changed his testimony on this point. He explained he had not recommended the Silverman raincoats be bought for the Civilian Conservation Corps, but that he merely had suggested the War Department, which acted as his purchasing agent, look into the matter.

It developed that Col. Crain, one of Harry H. Woodring's aids, was responsible for many purchases for the CCC, these duties having devolved upon the office of the Assistant Secretary of War.

Chairman Rogers (Democrat), of New Hampshire, read from the record of Fechner's testimony to the grand jury, showing the CCC head had told of submitting samples of Silverman's raincoats to the Bureau of Standards.

"If I said that, I made a mistake," Fechner said.

"But you did make that suggestion to the Assistant Secretary of War?"

"Yes."

"What action was taken?"

"None."

Specifications Changed.

Fechner repeated his testimony, given before a House appropriations sub-committee in February, regarding the specifications on fire extinguishers for the CCC. He explained he himself changed them when he found the War Department had prepared them so that one of the largest manufacturers in the country could not have competed in bidding on the contracts.

Maryland Race Goes to Campus

H. W. Smith Scheduled as First Candidate to Address Students.

H. Webster Smith, Republican candidate for Governor of Maryland, will address a students' meeting at the University of Maryland Monday night.

The meeting will be under the auspices of the Democratic Club of the university, of which Paul E. Welsh is president.

Smith will be the first of a series of speakers invited to the campus as a result of the recent straw vote taken by the Democratic Club. The six leading candidates have been asked to speak.

Mayor Howard W. Jackson, of Baltimore, a Democrat, will address the group on May 2. Dr. Charles Conley, Democrat, of Frederick, will visit the university in April. Harry Nice, Republican, will speak May 15, according to a tentative program. Other engagements will be announced later.

Trial in Chicago Of Insulls Unlikely

Chicago, March 16 (AP).—Bitterness engendered by financial ruination of thousands of residents probably would preclude trial in Chicago of Samuel Insull and his brother, Martin, it was suggested tonight.

Accused as "archconspirators" in one of the greatest financial collapses in history, the pair face numerous charges in both Federal and State courts here.

William E. Trautman, assistant attorney general of Illinois, tought efforts would be made to obtain a change of venue without the pair making an appearance in the metropolitan area, where it has been estimated nine out of every ten persons were hit in one way or another by the failure.

Secret Out!

Byrns Learns Starlings "Hid" in His Pie.

Representative Byrns, of Tennessee, majority leader of the House, yesterday admitted starling pie is not a bad dish—except in retrospect.

Until he saw newspaper stories that starling pie and not reed bird pie had been served at the luncheon given Thursday by South Trimble, clerk of the House, Byrns said he did not know that he had been the victim of a practical joke, along with a half dozen other House leaders.

"The pie was delicious, though," he said, "and I ate every bone clean. I'll admit it doesn't seem so good now as it did then, however."

Trimble, meanwhile, delighted at his little joke, announced that he would have a starling pie prepared for the press. But realizing that you can't fool reporters—that is, not much—he decided to forewarn them.

Tie-up Takes Rush Out of Rush Hour

This long line of green, a reminder that it was the eve of St. Patrick's Day, is really a street car tie-up which made hundreds of riders fret yesterday during the period known humorously as the "rush hour." This particular "rushing" incident occurred at Fourteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

Lindbergh Says Mail Policy Unfair

Army Not Equipped for Mail Service; Had Wrong Planes.

the Atlantic with one leap, Lindbergh pushed his way through the crowd of spectators promptly at 10:30 a. m.

He waited patiently while photographers jostled and shoved in attempts to get their cameras into better positions. Then he flicked his still unruly hair back with his hand and took the witness chair. He testified in a clear voice, deliberately phrasing each word, and he never lost polse. Both Democrats and Republicans agreed he was a "good witness."

He promptly and unequivocally stated his opinion of the order that took the air-mail away from all domestic concerns who held awards.

"I feel these companies have—and should have had—the right to trial before being convicted of guilt which is only implied and not proved," he said earnestly.

Shies at Questions.

Once or twice the queries swung to the testimony before another Senate committee that laid the foundation for the cancellation.

"I know nothing of that," the flier crisply said when asked by Chairman McKellar about the circumstances under which the contracts were let in 1930.

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), Wyoming, also sought to draw him into a discussion of the award of contracts, but Lindbergh termed several of his queries "hypothetical."

He promptly agreed, however, with a suggestion by Senator Logan (Democrat), Kentucky, that the contracts should be restored to the private companies pending a final review of the entire situation and a "definite determination of guilt."

Lindbergh said he "was," a technical adviser to Transcontinental and Western Air Express, one of the companies which held an air-mail contract.

The committee members questioned him briefly about his salary and stock bonuses.

"Let me say," he smiled, "that I've never received a gift or gratuity from an aviation company. I've worked for them, I might have received more in another field—probably could have—but I preferred aeronautics."

Blow to Aviation.

The witness described the cancellation as a blow to American aviation "whose extent is as yet unrevealed."

Twice Lindbergh has rebuffed a plea by Secretary Dern that he serve on a board to investigate Army aviation, including its transportation of the mails, but he did not criticize the service's unlucky effort to take over the job.

"The Army mail carrying was not as efficient as that of the private companies," he said, but he added the service lacked "proper equipment and the time to prepare for the task."

"Why," he smiled, "if I attempted to fly my old mail route from St. Louis to Chicago it would be weeks before I would really be able to do a good job."

Lindbergh disagreed with testimony Thursday by Brig. Gen. William Mitchell that American aviation was behind that of other countries.

"We are far superior where commercial aviation is concerned," he insisted.

His reference to the claims section of the air-mail bill amounted to denunciation, but he objected only mildly to other sections and refused to be drawn into a discussion of rates provided in the measure, saying that "is out of my field."

Opposes Permanent Subsidy.

The committee sought his views on almost every aviation subject and Lindbergh told them that he was opposed to permanent aviation subsidy.

"It can be justified," he said, "only so long as the industry is improving very rapidly."

A few paces down the corridor, the special Senate committee, whose disclosures began the air-mail furore, was in session but the witnesses and investigators outnumbered the spectators.

Another Senate group was inquiring, meanwhile, into short selling of aviation stock just before the contracts were canceled.

At the conclusion of the Lindbergh testimony, Clarence Chamberlin, who, like Lindbergh, had gained his place in the aeronautical world by flying the North Atlantic, took the stand.

After Chamberlin concluded, Edward P. Warner, of New York, former Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aviation, told the committee "you can't have a Nation-wide aviation system without a Government subsidy."

The witness said he was astounded at the testimony of Gen. Mitchell that the United States was lagging behind other nations in aviation.

He said American pilots had flown 16,000,000 miles last year for every fatality and that the record was "two or three times as good" as in any other year either here or abroad.

Urges New Regulation.

Warner urged a separate commission or an increased membership for the I. C. C. to determine the public convenience and necessity for all air-mail routes and to fix rates at the end of four years. . .

Chairman McKellar began his questioning of Lindbergh by asking: "If the contracts (of the air-mail lines) were obtained by fraud you wouldn't approve them?"

"Of course not," Lindbergh replied. "I wouldn't approve anything illegal. I don't think that has been proved, however."

O'Mahoney reminded Lindbergh that no criminal action had been taken as yet against the air-mail companies and said he believed Lindbergh in his "demand for a hearing" had confused civil and criminal actions.

"I am not a lawyer," Lindbergh said, "but I think the right to trial for these companies is so obvious that it is no legal question."

"I believe you are connected with Transcontinental and Western Air Express," O'Mahoney said. "Before another committee there was evidence that that concern entered into a collusive agreement to buy off Earl Halliburton, so that he would not bid on an air-mail contract."

The Senate Air and Ocean Mail Committee has heard testimony that Halliburton was paid $1,400,000 for his agreement not to bid on a contract.

Should Prove Charges.

"I know nothing about that," Lindbergh told the Wyoming Senator.

"But you wouldn't approve of it if that was done?" McKellar inquired.

"No, but I feel that these charges should have been definitely established before these contracts were canceled."

"Do you think that Postmaster General Brown was right in establishing transcontinental lines?" Senator Barbour (Republican), New Jersey, asked.

"I am not sufficiently acquainted with the details of setting up those lines to comment on his methods," the witness replied. "But I do know that commercial aviation improved greatly while he was in office."

Barbour asked whether competition between Transcontinental and Western Air, United and American Airways was keen.

"So far as technical details are concerned," the aviator replied.

"Do you mean to say that they competed for these air-mail awards?" McKellar asked.

"That's something I know nothing about. I have no reason to think there wasn't competition."

Doesn't Know About Pay.

Lindbergh said he received $6,000 a year from Trancontinental and Western Air and up to the first of the month $10,000 a year from Pan-American Airways.

"I haven't heard what I am getting from Trancontinental since the contracts were canceled," he smiled.

The Army mail planes grounded after a series of fatalities have not yet resumed the mail routes.

Carlton Putnam, president of the Pacific Seaboard Airlines, told the committee that his company was an independent line without a mail contract and that he hoped the bill would provide that small independent units might obtain mail awards.

Col. Eddie Rickenbacker, war ace, will be heard by the committee today.

Mail Hearing Highlights

(By the Associated Press.)

Some of the striking quotations from Charles A. Lindbergh's testimony on air mail yesterday before the Senate Postoffice Committee were:

I feel that these charges (that air-mail companies obtained contracts through fraud) should have been definitely established before these contracts were canceled. I feel it was the right of the companies, the public and my own right to have them definitely established.

Let me say that this portion of this bill which would bar the companies from pressing claims (against the Government) is as contrary to American liberty as anything I have ever seen.

Personally I am opposed to a permanent subsidy (for aviation). If used at all, it can be used to advantage in encouraging aviation in the first years. It can be justified as long as the industry is improving very rapidly and decreased in proportion to theim-improving very rapidly and decreased in proportion to the im-

The Army had only ten days to take over a system (the air-mail routes) that was built up by private companies over ten years. The Army equipment was not designed for mail carrying. The pilots were not familiar with the air-mail routes.

So far as commercial aviation is concerned, America leads—or rather did lead—the world.

I do know that commercial aviation improved greatly while he (former Postmaster General Walter F. Brown) was in office.

I know nothing of the circumstances under which the air-mail contracts were obtained and, of course, I wouldn't defend anything illegal, but I think the companies were entitled to a hearing.

Here are some excerpts from Clarence D. Chamberlin's testimony:

There seems to have been some reason for doing it (canceling the air-mail contracts), but if it was sufficient, I am not prepared to say.

Yes, I said some lines had operated passenger planes which I thought were less safe for flying than other available planes. . . . The lines were Eastern Air Transport and United Air Lines, but the planes I referred to have been replaced.

It is very desirable to divorce air lines from manufacturing companies.

No, I wouldn't approve air-mail contracts if they were fraudulently procured.

Bad weather accounted for a good deal of the trouble (the Army fatalities in flying the air mail).

It is my own opinion that if the lines (the air-mail lines) are able to meet conditions or reorganization, they should be allowed to bid again out of consideration for investors.

Curtiss-Wright Sues Mitchell For Slander

$200,000 Damages Asked of Former Air Chief in U. S. Court.

Action to collect from Brig. Gen. William Mitchell $200,000 damages for alleged slander was started in the United States District Court for Eastern Virginia at Alexandria yesterday by the Curtiss-Wright Corporation.

A summons returnable April 16 was served on Mitchell, but the details of the charges were not revealed.

Gardner L. Boothe, attorney for the airplane manufacturers, said some of Mitchell's recent public utterances were basis of the suit.

"Gen. Mitchell," Boothe said, "has made in public serious charges against Curtiss-Wright Corporation, which is now calling upon him to prove those charges in court."

Curtiss-Wright is a Delaware corporation, with headquarters in New York. The action is being started in Alexandria because Gen. Mitchell's Middleburg home is within the jurisdiction of the United States court there.

Black, Expert On Peking Man, Dies in China

Skull of Human Believed Closest Approach to "Missing Link."

Peiping, China, March 16 (AP).—Dr. Davidson Black, 49, noted scientist and authority on the so-called "Peking man," whose explorations led him into many dangers, died today in his office.

Dr. Black, a Canadian, was professor of anatomy at the Peking Union Medical College and a director in the National Geological Survey of China.

His greatest contributions to anthropology came in his work with the "Peking skull," unearthed in the quarries of Chow Outien, 30 miles from here, in December, 1929.

Although known as the "Peking man," the skull generally has been accepted as that of a woman.

Shortly after the skull was found, Prof. Amadeus W. Grabau asserted that the skull was the nearest approach to the so-called missing link that had ever been unearthed. Roy Chapman Andrews, noted explorer, referred to the skull as the most important discovery in the whole history of human evolution.

He called attention to the vault of the skull form and the massive ridges in the skull and showed that it had a comparatively large brain capacity. He estimated that the "Peking man" probably had lived more than 1,000,000 years ago.

The place of the "Peking man" in the "time table" of man's evolution, has not been determined. Many scientists agree that he came before the "Java Apeman," who probably existed some 500,000 years ago. Dr. Black was of the opinion the Chinese specimen was older than that of the "Neanderthal man."

Druggan Seeks Habeas Corpus Prison Release

Former Beer Baron Says He Has Completed Legal Time.

Atlanta, March 16 (AP).—Terry Druggan, former Chicago beer baron, wants to get out of the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary immediately.

He is trying the habeas corpus route in Federal District Court here to gain his freedom, as did Al Capone twice without success.

Federal Judge E. Marvin Underwood set a hearing for 10 a. m. tomorrow.

Druggan claims he has served the time legally required in his sentence of two and one-half years for income evasion.

He also was fined $5,000, and the petition says the Government confiscated funds, ordered some of his property sold and took other means of obtaining money to decrease his income tax delinquency.

Judge Underwood is asked to liberate the petitioner, who has about five more months of his original sentence, and relieve him of paying the $5,000 fine.

Roper Advocates School to Train New Brains Trust

St. Louis, March 16 (AP).—A National institute of public affairs, in which men may be trained for statesmanship, was urged here today by Daniel C. Roper, Secretary of Commerce, in an address before the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce.

The institute would be to the Government what West Point and Annapolis are to the Army and Navy, he said.

"We are attempting to create such an institution through cooperation of the Civil Service Department and the Bureau of Education of the Interior Department," he said.

"Courses in citizenship and political science would be made a part of the curriculum and the names of those who excel in these classes would provide an unassembled Civil Service University.

Air Lines Waiting Roosevelt's Reply

Share-Holders to Ask Early Hearing.

New York, March 16 (AP).—Sumner Sewall, Bath (Me.) banker, announced today that he has asked share owners in three leading aircraft companies to join an "air transport stockholders' committee," which will seek to obtain "a hearing for our management" on the cancellation of air-mail contracts.

Sewall, a wartime "ace" flier, last week addressed letters to the presidents of United Air Transport, Aviation Corporation and Tronscontinental-Western Air Express, requesting explanation of "what you have been doing with my property."

"Two of the companies addressed have replied," Sewall's letter to stockholders states, "telling of their efforts to secure a hearing. Their letters to the Postmaster General and to the President have to date remained unanswered.

House Insists On Restoration Of 10% of Pay

Also Sustains Its Cut in Senate Allowances to Veterans.

amendment, the vote stood 190 yeas to 189 nays.

Speaker Rainey thereupon voted nay and called for a recapitulation of the balloting for the first time in many years. When the balloting was concluded, Republicans, led by Representative Dowell, of Iowa, insisted that the Speaker announce the results, as no one had changed his vote.

Representative O'Connor (Democrat), of New York, then came to the rescue of the majority leaders and asked whether any member might change his vote before the result was announced. Rainey ruled that he might, and then delayed proceedings a few minutes longer while the tellers appeared to be busy recounting the votes.

With the House members sitting on the edge of their seats in tense excitement, Kennedy then arose and said:

"Mr. Speaker, I desire to change my vote from 'yes' to 'nay.'"

Confusion Reigns.

Party leaders and their supporters broke into cheers, while Republicans and the veterans' bloc booed. Confusion reigned for several minutes.

Action on the pay cut was less exciting, the majority members indicating that they considered 5 per cent restoration February 1 and an additional 5 per cent July 1 adequate.

When Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, told a story of a suicide of a Government employe, resulting, he said, from his low pay, the Democratic side broke into boos and catcalls that lasted for several minutes.

After the House had resumed order, Dirksen said: "It's pretty easy for members to assume a dispassionate attitude on pay restoration when they are getting 85 per cent of $10,000 a year, but it's different when you're getting 85 per cent of $1,800 or less."

Democrat Rebuked.

Later Representative Rogers (Republican), Massachusetts, rebuked the Democrats for laughing at the suicides of Government employes.

Party lines were broken on the vote, though the majority of those voting to recede on the Vinson amendment and concur in the Senate amendment for full restoration were Republicans.

Previously, Minority Leader Bertrand Snell, of New York, urged a "Clean cut vote" on the pay issue, and Representative Vinson (Democrat), of Georgia, sponsor of the 5-and-5 amendment stated that there was a difference of $85,000,000 in the House and Senate amendments.

As a result of the House action the Independent Offices bill will go to conference early next week, but the House conferees, headed by Republican Woodrum, will be prevented from bargaining below the House amendments or above the Senate amendments.

This means that, so far as Congress is concerned that unless the President shall veto the measure, government employes are assured of 5 per cent pay return as of February 1 and an additional 5 per cent July 1, while veterans are assured that they will not get less than $90,000,000 or more than $118,000,000.

Pay Accord Likely.

It is believed that the Senate conferees will agree to the pay compromise but may hold out for additional benefits for the veterans, at least for Spanish-American War veterans, World War presumptive cases, and emergency army officers.

The principal differences between the House and the Senate amendments on veterans' benefits are:

The House amendment restores 29,000 World War presumptive cases to 75 per cent of their status before passage of the economy act, whereas the Senate amendment would restore them to 100 per cent.

The House amendment reduces the allowance for Spanish-American War veterans and their dependents by about $20,000,000 under the Senate amendment.

Emergency officers' benefits are stricken by the House amendment and provided by the Senate.

Finally, the Borah amendment to the Senate amendment, retaining the 15 per cent pay cut for all government salaries above $6,000, is eliminated by the House amendment.

Sulu's 'Sultan' On Way 'Home'

Fugate to Resume Job to Halt Trouble in Philippines.

James R. Fugate, of Tennessee, soldier, teacher and administrator, is on his way back to the Philippine Islands to become "Sultan of Sulu," or, more officially, the Governor of Sulu, Uncle Sam's representative in the turbulent southernmost group of the Philippine Islands.

Fugate has been recalled to the Philippines by Gov. Gen. Frank Murphy, because the inhabitants of Sulu refuse to behave when he is away.

In 1929, Fugate left Jolo, in the Sulu Islands, to enter a United States veterans' hospital. Recently, it was announced that he was sufficiently recovered to return.

Fugate was a soldier in the Philippine insurrection. After it was quelled he entered the Philippine teaching service from 1901 to 1906. Later, he served in the Philippine Bureau of Lands. From 1914 to 1927 he was Governor of the Oriental Negrito Province. Then he became Governor of Sulu. After his departure from the islands disturbances began in Sulu and their continuance prompted Gov. Gen. Murphy to ask for Fugate's return.

Hurja Resigns PWA Office To Aid Farley

Mr. Hurja moved into the PWA headquarters, presumably to assist faithful Democrats in obtaining jobs.

Throughout the Roosevelt Presidential campaign Mr. Hurja operated under Chairman Farley's wing. His surveys of the political situation were so accurate that Mr. Farley came to have great confidence in his information and judgment. After the new Administration took office, Mr. Hurja, an affable young man of Finnish descent, was assigned to a job in the RFC. From his office there he was understood to have kept a sharp eye out for available jobs in various Government branches to which Democrats might be appointed. Then as the PWA began to function he was shifted there.

Ickes' Denial Emphatic.

When it was intimated his function would be to look out for patronage in the public works organization, Secretary Ickes issued an emphatic statement that he would handle appointments himself and that Mr. Hurja would have nothing to do with such matters. Minor appointments were placed in the hands of Ebert K. Burlew, a Republican holdover.

In accepting Mr. Hurja's resignation, Secretary Ickes paid tribute to his loyalty.

"I am sorry to lose you from the Public Works Administration," Secretary said in his letter. "You have been a real help in many difficult situations and there has never been a time when I could not rely upon you loyally and intelligently to work for the best interests of the organization of which you were a part.

"I understand why the Democratic National committee should want to avail itself of your services with an important campaign approaching. I can not stand in the way of your accepting the appointment that Mr. Farley has offered you at headquarters and I accept your resignation with regret."

Business Picking Up.

Mr. Hurja will direct party affairs at committee headquarters in the National Press Bilding. There will be an increasing amount of work to be handled there as the financial campaign of the committee begins and as the Congressional campaign develops.

However, it has been indicated that the National committee will attempt to play an inconspicuous part in the campaign, leaving activities more in the hands of the House and Senate committee. Party leaders say they desire to avoid the mistake of Woodrow Wilson, who in 1918 appealed for election of a Democratic Congress and was rebuked by losing control of both houses. In view of that experience the Administration hopes to refrain from an active role in the coming campaign.

Charles Michelson, director of publicity for the National committee, has given little time to that work in recent months. He is serving as director of publicity for NRA and in addition is a consultant for other agencies of the Government in publicity matters.

Republicans meantime have put new life into their organization by consolidating their House and Senate campaign committees into a joint body, assisted by publicity and research bureaus. It is not expected that the Republican National committee will be active in the Congressional fight, owing to disagreements over policies between Everett Sanders, Republican National chairman, and Congressional leaders.

Reich Bans Dietrich In "Song of Songs"

Berlin, March 16 (AP).—Germany clamped a ban today on the film "Das Home Lied"—the Paramount production "Song of Songs," featuring Marlene Dietrich.

No reason for the ban was assigned. The film was banned in Australia and India months ago.

Plan to Rival Pasadena, New Orleans Festivals With Celebration.

Cherry Fete Expected to Draw Thousands of Visitors Here.

Cabinet members and Ambassador Hiroshi Saito of Japan will be asked to act as sponsors of a three-day National Capital Cherry Blossom Festival when the trees around the Tidal Basin blossom.

This was decided at a meeting yesterday in the District Building of 70 civic leaders, who answered a call of the District Commissioners. It is hoped the festival will rival the New Orleans Mardi Gras, the Pasadena Festival of Roses, and the Winchester Apple Blossom Festival.

Tentative plans were made for selection of a "Queen of the Cherry Blossom Festival," military parades, a regatta, a horse show, and entertainment which will amuse the thousands of visitors who are expected to view the famous blooms.

Bloom About April 15.

Claude W. Owen, general chairman of the committee, said the exact date for the celebration can not be determined until it is definitely ascertained when the trees will bloom. They are expected to begin blossoming about April 15.

"We want to focus National attention on the Capital," Mr. Owen said, "and the medium for doing this is the annual blooming of the cherry blossoms."

Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, chairman of the parade committee, disclosed tentative plans for a military parade around the Tidal Basin, in which would be symbolized the outstanding events of the country's history which have occurred in April.

Hunting Costumes Suggested.

Col. C. L. Scott, chairman of the Horse Show committee, suggested a parade of riders in hunting costumes from all hunt clubs within a radius of 30 miles.

Mrs. William Howard Taft, widow of the President, will be asked to act as one of the sponsors, Mr. Owen said. It was during the Taft Administration that the Japanese government presented the famous trees to the National Capital.

All committee chairmen have been asked to hold meetings before Wednesday, when a session of the general committee will be held at the District Building.

Park Savings Bank Is Sued for $5,500

Sarah B. Foote Seeks to Collect on Notes.

Sara Brooke Foote, 1008 Hillyer place northwest, yesterday asked the intervention of the District Supreme Court in a dispute with the receiver of the Park Savings Bank over $5,500.

She said that she deposited with the bank several years ago, 11 notes for $500 each. After several extensions, it was shown, the notes were paid in full to the bank, which held the notes for payment of interest and principal.

The bank paid her only the interest, and shortly thereafter closed its doors, she charges, and asks that the court impose a trust on $5,500 of the present funds of the bank in her favor.

3 Major School Items Passed By House Body

Will Consider Police, Fire, Health Department Fund Monday.

The House District Appropriations sub-committee rushed through the school estimates yesterday, and then adjourned until Monday, when they will take up police, fire and health department needs for 1935.

Representative Blanton (Democrat), Texas, was absent. Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, explained the school estimates, totaling $9,504,106, as against $8,540,713 for 1934.

Most of the items were for personnel and administrative costs, there being only three major construction projects—ten classrooms and a gymnasium for Browne Junior High School, $168,000; $400,000 for continuing construction of the Woodrow Wilson High School, and $36,000 for a gymnasium at Powell Junior High School.

The most controversial item was not before the committee, as it is being held up by the Budget Bureau. It provides for an appropriation sufficient to complete the Anacostia Junior High School, for which contract has not been awarded, although the District Commissioners have an initial appropriation.

Engineer Commissioner John C. Gotwals offered a compromise plan for operating the Southeast incinerator on a part-time basis. Sanitary Engineer J. B. Gordon said the incinerator could be operated without any more money than is provided in the 1934 act. The committee last year ordered the incinerator closed for what they termed "economy." Maj. Gotwals said the crew which operates the Georgetown incinerator could be used to operate the Southeast incinerator also.

'Writing World's Worst Job,' Says Cobb's Author-Daughter

Follows Father Because Everyone Expected It, She Asserts.

New York, March 16 (AP).—She might have become an actress, archeologist or social butterfly, but Elizabeth Cobb chose instead to follow in the literary footsteps of her father, Irvin S. Cobb, even though writing is to her the "most miserable" occupation in the world.

She wrote her first book in a "haunted" Florentine monastery, traveled with a circus and on cattle boats to obtain "color" for others, but today she said her life "hasn't been a bit glamorous."

She has written three novels and is half-way through another.

Irvin S. Cobb's daughter is a brunette, who talks with the same facility with which she writes, and who has inherited her father's knack of yarn-spinning.

"A lot of people do things because they are expected to," she said, "although, curiously enough, my father never expected me to write. Now that I have buckled down to it I think he is a little bit tickled."

An only child, Miss Cobb spends much time in her father's company. Last fall they went hunting together in Mexico.

Her father refuses to criticize her work, or even to read it until it is set in proof, holding that she must work out her own writing problems.

CWA Strikes Grow Through N. Y.; Two Walkouts Settled

Syracuse, March 16 (AP).—CWA strikes spread through New York State today, taking in 4,500 men at Syracuse, 400 at Solvay, 350 at Rome, 200 at Batvia, 40 at Glens Falls and 2,000 at Buffalo, but before the day closed those at Buffalo and Rome had been settled.

At Buffalo, where 2,000 dropped their tools at a stone quarry this morning, the men agreed to go back to work after an order spreading their 24 hours over five days was withdrawn in favor of three eight-hour days.

At Rome, after a conference with William A. Wolff, city administrator, and an address by Police Chief J. T. Owens, the men agreed to return to work tomorrow pending negotiations.

In all other cases the strikes were in protest against pay cuts.

In yracuse the strike halted progress on all the 30 outdoor projects. One included building a baseball park for the newly acquired club in the International League.

Czech-Colombia Envoy Confers With Veverka

Klecanda Stoutly Maintains His Nation Has No Warlike Intent.

On his way to Colombia to fulfill a secret mission, Gen. Vladimir V. Klecanda, Czechoslovakian military leader, arrived in Washington yesterday to pay his respects to Minister Ferdinand Veverka before going to Bogota.

Commander of the garrison at Prague, Gen. Klecanda was reluctant to discuss the purpose of his official visit to Colombia. He said he did not know what service he would be called upon to perform. Gen. Klecanda said he was being sent by his government at the request of Colombia's minister of war.

He emphasized the friendly relations which exist between his country and all American nations. Colombia purchased war supplies from Czechoslovakia in the last few years. Gen. Klecanda denied his mission had anything to do with the Leticia dispute involving Colombia and Peru.

Gen. Klecanda is an authority on military intelligence methods. He held high posts during the World War and served in Siberia in 1918 and 1919.

Bishop Cannon Trial Is Sped By Concessions

Stipulations to Do Away With Controversies Over Evidence.

Stipulations signed yesterday by attorneys for Bishop James Cannon, jr., and Miss Ada L. Burroughs, defendants, and the prosecuting attorneys promised to shorten considerably trial of the two on charges of violating the corrupt practices act.

Bishop Cannon, through his stipulations, disposed of several matters that necessarily will arise in his trial in April. Matters relating to bank accounts, books and papers were admitted by each side so that the necessity of going into the legal rules governing the admission of such evidence were dispensed with.

Bishop Cannon and Assistant United States Attorney John J. Wilson, in charge of prosecution, agreed that it would be a waste of time to require either side to introduce documentary evidence with the usual formalities.

The charge against Bishop Cannon and Miss Burroughs is that they failed to report properly contributions received by the Virginia Anti-Smith committee in the Presidential campaign in which Smith opposed Hoover. The money was allegedly received from E. C. Jameson, New York capitalist.

Bishop Cannon and Miss Burroughs fought the case to the United States Supreme Court on the basis of unconstitutionality of the indictment. The court dismissed six of the eight counts. The pair will go on trial on only two counts.

How to Keep Well

Dr. By W. A. Evans.

Very Young Babies.

Babies more than six months old are reasonably healthy. The difficulty we are now having relates principally to the very young babies. If ways can be worked out and applied for getting the baby through the prenatal period, through the crises of birth, and then through the first two weeks of life the chances to escape the hazards of early infancy will be greatly lessened.

Since the prenatal and birth periods are those of greatest danger the procedures for the protection of young baby life largely relate to the mother. Three are in somewhat general use, though far from being on a fully satisfactory basis. One is to protect the mother and baby against the toxemias of pregnancy going by such names as pernicious vomiting of pregnancy, puerperal convulsions, puerperal coma, high blood pressure, and acute nephritis of pregnancy. This condition is very dangerous to both mother and child.

The second is protection against inherited syphilis by means of blood testing and treatment when that is found necessary. The third is good obstetric care. A fourth is addition to the mother's diet of vitamin B complex foods, in order that the mother may have an abundant supply of milk, and in order that the baby may come into the world endowed with enough vigor to make him hold on.

In order to accomplish the first of these purposes the mother, her family, and her physician must be alert during the antenatal period. There should be systematic weighing, taking of blood pressure, and urinalyses. Undue gain in weight, increase in blood pressure, or the presence of albuminuria must be regarded as warning signs. Morning nausea, within limits, may be inescapable, but it should be watched and if it becomes severe it is to be treated as a warning of conditions that threaten both mother and child. Excess salivation, vomiting, swelling of the feet, and cramps are also signposts that are not to be disregarded.

Dr. G. W. Theobald considers mineral deficiencies as prominent causes of the toxemia of pregnancy. Of these, lime deficiency is ranked first. To prevent it, he favors giving pregnant women foods rich in lime. Among such are milk, cheese, cottage cheese, butter and whole grains. In addition he gives lime as a medicine either by mouth or by injections. He advocates injections of gluconate of lime deep into the muscles during the thirty-second and the thirty-sixth week of pregnancy.

Many pregnant women need an extra supply of iodine for themselves and their babies. This is supplied by adding sea food to the diet or by giving iodized salt where and when salt is used on food. Many pregnant women need iron. This he supplies by giving them yellow of egg and spinach. He frequently gives iron pills in addition.

Some pregnant women eat too much meat. He has his patients limit themselves to meat once a day, preferably at the noon meal. He thinks fish is better than other forms of meat. The effort should be to feed pregnant women with a well-balanced, common sense diet consisting of plain foods. There should be plenty of vitamins and vitamin-rich foods, yeast and whole grains for B, milk for A and D, and cod liver oil and good vegetables and fruits for C.

Some Basis for It.

E. W. writes: Is it true that a woman who has had Bright's disease can not live through childbirth?

Reply.

That would be an extreme statement and not fully supported by the facts. However, there is a sound basis for a more moderate statement. A woman who has had kidney trouble during a pregnancy should have her case subsequently studied to determine the safety of another pregnancy. If pregnant the condition of her kidneys and her blood pressure should be watched carefully.

Granulated Eyelids.

E. S. writes: What are granulated eyelids? What causes them? What is the treatment? I have a red spot on each eyelid that itches and burns. My friends say I have granulated eyelids.

Reply.

Granulated lids is a commonly used name for any chronic inflammation of the border of the lids. Some cases of granulated lids are trachoma, a rather serious communicable disease. It is spread by face towels and wash basins. Another variety results from poor nutrition, and a third from eyestrain. Not wearing properly fitting glasses may be the cause of the last.

Antilynching Bill Opposed By Sumners

Princess Anne Druggist Also Heard in Denial of Mob Charge.

Opposition to the Costigan-Wagner antilynching bill was expressed yesterday by Representative Sumners (Democrat), Texas, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee. He said the bill would encourage, rather than retard lynching.

Sumners was preceded before the Senate Judiciary sub-committee by William H. Thompson, Princess Anne, Md., druggist, who denied connection with the lynching of George Armwood, colored, last fall. Thompson's name had been given to the committee as one of the participants in the lynching by William Preston Lane, jr., Maryland attorney general.

Following investigation of the Armwood lynching Maryland State troops were sent by Gov. Ritchie to the Eastern Shore to arrest alleged participants. The appearance of troops resulted in a riot.

Sumners, in his testimony, objected to placing the power to enforce antilynching laws in the hands of Federal officials.

He expressed the fear that there would be a tendency on the part of local officials to shirk responsibility and "let Uncle Sam do it." He said that the appearance of a United States marshal in a community in which a lynching had occurred would prejudice local juries.

Senator Costigan (Democrat), Colorado, coauthor of the bill, read a letter from Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Holmes, parents of Jack Holmes, who was lynched by a mob at San Jose, Calif., last November. The letter said the police had "filled the lynchers full of whisky," and that officials made no attempt to stop the lynching.

They said they could have proved the innocence of their son, and that they hoped the antilynching bill would pass.

Collection of 97.94 Per Cent Of Danville Taxes Sets Record

Danville, Va., March 16 (AP).—What may be a municipal record for the country was established last year by this city in collecting 97.94 per cent of the city's tax assessment.

Federal statisticians who came here recently compiling data for governmental purposes found the figures all but staggering. They looked again and then wrote a letter to Washington about it.

They said that nowhere had they found a comparable record and believed it was a mark unreached by any other municipality in the Nation. Some cities they had visited, they said, considered they had done well when they collected 65 per cent of the assessmen during the difficult economic years.

Councilman Landon Wyatt said City Collector D. J. Garvin had collected $558,114.85 in taxes, licenses, auto stripes and miscellaneous accounts for 1933, at a cost of only 1.67 per cent. This raised the total amount of tax deficiency to 2.91 per cent.

DR. HENRY READ McILWAINE, Virginia State Librarian and noted collector of Virginia Colonial history, who died in Richmond.

Dr. McIlwaine, State Librarian 27 Years, Dies

Richmond, March 16 (AP).—Dr. Henry Read McIlwaine, 69, Virginia State librarian for more than a quarter of a century, died today of pneumonia.

He had achieved a wide reputation as a collector and editor of historical data, and through his efforts much of the valuable material on the colonial history of Virginia had been brought within the reach of students. He also developed a traveling library and mail-loan system.

He is survived by a brother, Judge Richard McIlwaine, of Norfolk, and four sisters. He was unmarried.

Dr. McIlwaine received his early education in private schools in Petersburg, was graduated from Hampden-Sydney College in 1885, and received his Ph. D. from Johns Hopkins University in 1893. He taught in private schools for several years before becoming professor of history and English in Hampden-Sydney. In 1907 he came to Richmond as State librarian.

New Scale Drafted.

Roanoke, Va., March 16 (Spl.).—Beginning today, CWA employes will receive a minimum of 35 cents per hour for common laborers and teamsters, up to 90 cents for brick masons. E. B. Brown, administrator, said the schedule was worked out by a committee headed by Miss May Hankins of the Social Service Bureau.

Col. Marion S. Battle has been elected chairman of the local CWA advisory committee to succeed Dr. Frank S. Cooper. E. M. Herringdon is the new vice chairman.

Work May Be Extended.

Bristol, Va., March 16 (Spl.).—CWA employe quotas for Bristol, Va., for the next three weeks indicate a possible extension of work beyond March 30, but local officials are not optimistic over the chances.

For next week the quota is 139 men, 10 women and 18 special airport workers; for the week of March 23, 116 men, 8 women and 15 airport workers. For the period beginning March 30, however, a quota of 90 men, 7 women and 12 airport workers was set, with instructions that this quota would be effective from March 20 "until further notice."

In Bristol, Tenn., a score or more CWA workers have filed wage complaints with Col. Walter L. Simpson, State administrator, at Nashville, asking an investigation of alleged pay irregularities. Rock drillers and blacksmiths have complained that they received 60 or 75 cents an hour instead of the $1.10 allowed in original instructions.

Other complaints allege employes worked 8 to 12 hours a day all week "to keep our jobs," but were paid for only 24 or 30 hours a week.

in the country, the automobile directors contended, would be unionized by the Wagner proposal. They said passage of the bill would dip heavily into the pocketbooks of every man and woman in the country.

"Higher prices, constant labor trouble, strikes and lockouts would be among the consequences of this act," they claimed. "The effect also would be to subject the whole country to the dangers of a universal closed shop and a national strike involving the workers in every industry in the United States."

Regulation of labor unions as well as business, was demanded by the automobile directors.

Urges Union Control.

"National labor unions without a semblance of regulation from any quarter, if they could organize the American workers would, it is estimated, have an annual income of close to $4,000,000,000. It is fair to assume that the public when it knows the facts will demand for its protection the same measure of regulation applied to labor unions as is applied to business."

Union organizers, the statement recalled, enlisted only 10 per cent of the country's gainfully employed workers during the World War.

"Such organizers," the directors went on, "are now trying to legislate men into unions, to set up so-called organized labor, as the overlord of all American labor, in a position to extract dues from present nonmembers by coercive methods, and interested primarily in perpetuating the jobs of labor bureaucracy.

"An example of union dominance, and a foretaste of what the Nation may expect if the Wagner bill were enacted into law was evidenced recently at the National Capital. There, the construction of several large Government buildings was delayed for weeks by strikes due to jurisdictional disputes between two unions as to which should perform certain minor construction operations.

Auto Trade Example.

"Another example occurred last fall in the automobile industry. A few thousand tool and die makers on strike delayed the start of production on 1934 models about six weeks. These few thousand on strike cost six weeks' pay to nearly 200,000 other productive workers in the industry. Each man on strike cut into the incomes of approximately 30 other innocent men at a time when these 30 men needed a pay check badly.

"The Wagner bill reacts against the worker in that it would take away incentive for individual advancement. He would no longer have the inducement to do his work better in the hope of getting higher pay or a promotion. Seniority would be the determining factor under the bill, and among the discriminatory practices expressly forbidden are 'advancements, demotion, hire, reinstatement.' The individual would have no standing on his own merits. His boss would be the walking delegate and his loyalty, not to his job or his employer, but to the labor union organizer and the labor union official whose principal interest is often to expand the dues-paying membership.

See Incentive Menaced.

"One of the reasons the automobile industry has been relatively free from labor disputes is because it always had paid higher wages than other major industries and because wherever possible promotions in an organization have been made from within the ranks. The men know that if they do their work well they will be moved up at the first opportunity. The seniority clause of the Wagner bill removes the incentive, and also destroys one of the cardinal principles upon which successful management is based.

"No industry, entirely union in character, has made substantial progress in this country, and the effect of the Wagner bill is to force closed shop unionism on all industry. The right of the individual to work would be controlled by a union organizer, with attendant increased costs affecting not only the employes but the public and attendant risk of a national labor tie-up, the mere threat of which would be enough to exact any terms of settlement desired by labor leaders who may be responsible to no one but themselves.

"The bill would apply to farmers and to all other persons employing more than one individual, and would have a disastrous effect upon American agriculture if employes of the American farmer are to be subject to union labor dominance. In addition, it would result in a much wider spread between what the farmers can get for the products of his labor and what the city worker gets for his labor. The Wagner bill would place still greater hardships upon the rural population of this country.

Cooperation Stressed.

"The atomobile industry gives direct factory employment to nearly a quarter of a million people. As many more get their livelihood in sales and service activities, these directly and indirectly affected by the rate of operations of the Nation's automobile plants number several millions.

"As representatives of one of the Nation's largest industries, the directors of the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce have a keen interest in National recovery. To that end they were among the first to agree upon a code complying with the National industrial recovery act. They have made frequent upward wage adjustments and shortened hours in agreement with Administration recommendations, until today prevailing wage rates are above 1929 and weekly earnings are within 10 per cent of the all-time high.

"Mindful, however, that in time of great National emegency abuses inevitably appear, the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce unanimously opposes the Wagner bill as unreasonable and unfair. The automobile industry urges every voter who eventually will have to pay for those abuses, to get into immediate touch with his Senator or Representative at Washington and urge them to vote against such destructive legislative proposals."

Douglas in his testimony explained NRA compelled employers to band themselves together and enormously increase the power of their organizations. He added:

"If one set of economic interests is powerfully organized and the others are not the first group is likely to reach out for political and social control and to introduce a system which would be very similar to Fascism.

"In order to have a democratic balance in society it is therefore necessary that labor and the consumers should be at least equally well managed. But section 7 (a) of the National industrial recovery act has not given such equal rights and powers to the workers."

Husband's Plea For Wife Fails

Thea Best Given Year on Check Charge as Mate Seeks All Blame.

Thea Best, wife of Albert Best, sentenced three weeks ago to serve from one to three years in jail following his plea of guilty to a charge of obtaining money under false pretenses, yesterday was sentenced to from 1 year to 18 months by Justice Joseph W. Cox in the District Supreme Court.

The Bests were indicted for issuing an $800 bad check to Laura L. Waters, who was in charge of a travel bureau. They obtained traveler's checks for the check, and were arrested in Ohio.

Several weeks ago Best pleaded guilty and attempted to shoulder all the blame. He declared when his wife was tried that she knew nothing of the transaction. A jury found her guilty. Justice Cox refused probation because he declared there were other requests here for her arrest.

Orchestra Drive Lacks $29,000

$1,000 Raised in Week for Symphony Unit.

The National Symphony Orchestra still needs $29,000 to bring its sustaining fund for next season up to the necessary $60,000, it was revealed yesterday at a meeting held in Mrs. James Clement Dunn's home.

Captains of five campaign teams engaged in raising the fund revealed that this week had brought about $1,000. Mrs. Carey H. Brown's team collected the largest amount.

The sustaining fund must be pledged by April 1. Washingtonians are asked to contribute any amount or to take membership in the National Symphony Orchestra Association for 1934-1935 by contributing $25. Of this amount, 12 per cent will be redeemed in concert tickets.

History Lesson, Washington's Birthplace Not Mount Vernon

Interior Department Acts to Impart Accurate Information.

The George Washington Bicentennial and Representative Sol Bloom notwithstanding, a great many Americans believe that the First President was born at Mount Vernon.

The Interior Department acted yesterday apparently to correct this ignorance, brought to its attention through the Postoffice Department, which placed a special cachet on all mail going out from Washington's birthplace on February 22.

Nearly 2,300 pieces of mail were received from all parts of the world to be sent out for the benefit of stamp collectors. A large number of these letters were sent to Mount Vernon by the collectors.

Among the addresses which finally found their way to the special postoffice at the Westmoreland County, Va., birthplace of Washington were. Popes Creek, Bridges Creek, Wakefield and Mount Vernon, Wakefield of Mount Vernon, Washingtons Crossing, and near Ffredericksburg.

About 10 per cent were addressed to Wakefield, Va., a postoffice 142 miles from Washington's birthplace.

Savants Back Glacier Priest

National Geographic Group to Aid Hubbard in Alaska.

The National Geographic Society will cooperate with Father Bernard R. Hubbard, "the glacier priest," in exploration and mapping of the Alaskan peninsula and the Aleutian Islands this summer, it was announced yesterday by Dr. Gilbert Grosvenor, president of the society.

The expedition under Father Hubbard will use an airplane for photography. Canoes will be taken into the craters of Katmai and Aniachak volcanoes so that soundings and temperature studies can be made of the lakes that lie in the bottom of the huge pits.

It is hoped that data can be obtained that will make possible forecasting of eruptions in this important volcanic region. The expedition's plane will photograph the Valley of Ten Thousand Smokes, made known by the expedition of the society in 1916.

The expedition will use 50,000 feet of motion picture film and make 4,000 still photographs. Weekly reports will be made by radio. The party leaves in May. It will return in September.

Motorist Arrested After 3-Car Crash

Frank A. Riley, 1819 Kalorama road northwest, was charged with reckless driving following a three-auto crash early yesterday on the Mount Vernon boulevard. All three cars were damaged, but no one was injured.

Park police said Riley was driving toward Alexandria when his machine collided in succession with two cars bound north. One was operated by Henry A. Donovan, 4440 Forty-ninth street northwest, and the other by Claude E. Zimmerman, 1511 Franklin street northeast. Riley pleaded guilty before United States Commissioner Barton Phillips in Alexandria, police reported, and will be sentenced next Thursday.

Lie Detectors For Libraries.

Twenty-five Northwestern University law students submitted to the "lie detector" recently and more than 100 of the 250 books unlawfully missing from the university's library were returned the next day. This is a novel weapon in the hands of the otherwise defenseless librarian who for years everywhere has had to sit hopelessly by watching books do strange disappearing acts.

When the late Charles Belden, widely known Boston librarian, died, his successor, an aggressive young man, went to work to bring back books that had gone for years to destinations unknown. He advertised in the Boston press that fines would be dropped and no questions asked. Books that the library long ago had forgotten it had lost came back, dust and all. The movement was successful.

But think how much more so it might have been if each person, as he appeared with his bundle of books, had only been made to grasp the lie detector. Then instead of returning only that manual of ship model building he had left down in the cellar, he might also have been induced to bring back that first edition of Keats' Poems he had taken in the moment of bibliokleptomania that all book lovers sooner or later know.

Miniature lie detectors should be placed on the market for owners of private libraries. They might be disguised, perhaps, as strength-testing machines. They could then be taken to parties at the homes of friends and neighbors, put to work merely as a joke, and undoubtedly many an empty space in the parlor shelves would be filled again. For there is nothing a person will lie about more brazenly than the theft of a book, from friend or library. The average bibliomaniac doesn't consider taking a book an act of theft—unless it is taken from his own shelves. Then it is the unpardonable sin.

Uninspiring.

One can feel pity and sorrow for Joseph Conrad's Lord Jim, who fled from the scene of his cowardice to final moral redemption in the Patuan jungles. But it is difficult to be equally charitable toward Samuel Insull. His latest move, disguised as a woman aboard a chartered freighter, was too fantastic for success, and showed gross ingratitude for a country which had been, if anything, oversolicitous toward this fugitive from justice. Like fast-moving scenes of a Hollywood film it must have been, with flashes of night on the picturesque Aegean Sea, with the radio sounding recall, and with cut-backs to the faithful wife and the beautiful woman of mystery in the dingy back room of an Athens police station. But it was, after all, the last desperate act of a man obviously actuated by fear and a consciousness of guilt.

Insull's dramatic arrest came on the same day that the final court in Canada ruled that his brother, Martin, prince regent of the Insull empire, must go back to Cook County to face trial. It is doubtful now if Samuel Insull can much longer escape this ordeal. Perhaps the long melodrama is nearing its last and most exciting chapter, with a famous courtroom scene for its closing. In that last chapter the Insulls would be more admired had they chosen to stand like men when the structure crashed around their heads.

Loyalty To The Eagle.

The recent announcement that the Ford Company intends to restore the $5 per diem minimum wage has not been enthusiastically acclaimed by NRA officials. On the contrary, silence at headquarters gave rise to suspicion that an employer who rejects the Blue Eagle trade-mark is persona non grata, even if he cooperates wholeheartedly in giving effect to the economic policies of the Administration. That suspicion seems warranted by the issuance of an executive order excluding from Government contracts all concerns that have not certified compliance with the codes of fair competition of their respective industries. This order would disbar the Ford Company from supplying machines to the Federal Government or for projects wholly or partially financed by Federal funds.

If the main purpose of the NRA is furtherance of industrial regimentation by compulsion, the concerns that refuse to kiss the rod of office obviously must be disciplined. No distinction can be made between the nonconformists who sweat their workers and browbeat their competitors and those who adhere to enlightened business practices and liberal employment policies. If, however, industrial codes are simply intended to eliminate unfair practices and improve the status of labor, the Ford Company would seem to be a candidate for honors instead of demerits.

Professions of loyalty to the Blue Eagle do not guarantee conformity to the program which it symbolizes. Various codified industries are already seeking exemptions and concessions in respect to wages and hours, because of inability to meet the higher production costs entailed. An employer who flaunts the "Blue Eagle" while clamoring for wage reductions is a liability to the NRA. One who voluntarily increases wages because he believes in the basic wage principles underlying the recovery program is a real asset. The Ford Company not only indorses the controversial wage theories of the Administration but it has demonstrated its faith in a manner much more convincing than lip service.

Unemployment Insurance.

With Secretary Perkins as the first witness, hearings on the unemployment insurance bill introduced by Senator Wagner and Representative David J. Lewis are scheduled to begin next week before the Ways and Means Committee of the House. The measure has strong Administration support and has been drafted with a view to avoiding unwieldly centralization in launching a system of compulsory nation-wide unemployment insurance.

The underlying principle is utilization of the taxing power of Congress to initiate unemployment insurance in every State of the Union. With certain exceptions, such as farmers, a new Federal tax would be imposed on all employers for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1935, and thereafter. This tax is tentatively set at 5 per cent of the individual pay roll, which term is used to cover the compensation to all employes receiving less than $250 a month.

No employer, however, would need to pay this tax if he had contributed an equal sum to unemployment reserves under a certified State law, while lesser contributions of this character would be offset against the proposed Federal tax. In this manner it is hoped to encourage the establishment of State unemployment insurance systems developed in accordance with local conditions. The Wagner-Lewis bill envisages no Federal control over State schemes except to establish certain minimum standards necessary for certification to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Secretary of Labor. To be certified State unemployment insurance schemes would have to be able to pay minimum weekly benefits of $7 per week for a ten-week period to those insured persons becoming unemployed after the law had been a year in force.

In its present form the bill seems to throw too much of the responsibility for unemployment upon employers. Contributions by employed persons are highly desirable, not merely to distribute the expense but also to emphasize the insurance aspect and prevent the scheme from appearing merely charitable. Such bi-partite contribution can be worked out within the framework of the present bill, however. It is to be hoped that hearings on the subject will further consider the desirability of governmental contributions, whether National or State, in addition to those of industry. Since none can say that industry alone is responsible for unemployment it is undesirable to make industry alone attempt to carry the support of the unemployed. European systems of unemployment insurance generally have a triple contribution—from the State, employer and employed person. If a similar governmental contribution here should eliminate the need for future C.W.A. experimentation, the money would be well spent.

A chief merit of the Wagner-Lewis bill is its essential simplicity. By casting responsibility on the States it does not need to make provision for elaborate machinery through which tests of unemployment would be applied and benefits paid. Undoubtedly, however, the United States Employment Service, also a Federal-State scheme, would provide these agencies. Because of the importance of employment exchanges, in themselves and as a basis for unemployment insurance, the Senate has done well to restore the more than 50 per cent cut in the budget of the Employment Service which the House sought to make, out of political pique, some weeks ago.

The Coast Guard Cut.

Curtailment of the Coast Guard service is a result of the economy program inaugurated by President Roosevelt last summer. Congress appropriated $25,000,000 for the Coast Guard, but this was reduced to $18,000,000 by Executive order. As a result officials of the guard have found it necessary to reduce its personnel by about 900 men and to lay up nearly half of its patrol boats.

An attempt is being made to avoid impairment of the Coast Guard's essential service by scattering the boats still in operation along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, instead of grouping them at established bases. Nevertheless, it is impossible to see how 38 boats will be able to render the service heretofore performed by nearly twice that number. In addition to guarding our shores against rum runners (who are still in operation), narcotic smugglers, &c., the Coast Guard functions as a rescue squad in marine disasters. Its fast picket boats are credited with saving many lives every year. While the Government is spending millions of dollars on experimental projects, it is difficult to justify curtailment of a service of this kind.

Some of the boats which are being retired from the Coast Guard service are being turned over to other departments for various uses. If they continue in service in other branches of the Government, what savings will be effected? A similar question arises in connection with the reduction of personnel. Apprentice seamen receive only $21 per month, in addition to their sustenance; second class seamen, $36, and seamen, $44. This is less than the Government is paying to CWA employes for puttering around on odd jobs. Where is the logic behind the dismissal of coast guardsmen who are performing a useful service, while the Government is urging private industry to hire more men, and is spending several billions of tax money for the special purpose of creating jobs?

The importance of economy in Government under present circumstances can hardly be overemphasized. But when the pruning knife is applied to essential Federal agencies, while extravagance runs wild outside of the regular budget, the result may be doubly demoralizing.

An Ironic Forum.

If the civic organizations of Washington had deliberately planned to expose the absurdity of the local budgetary system, they probably could not have devised a more effective means than a direct appeal to the Federal Budget Bureau. Numerous requests for libraries and bridges have been made to the District Commissioners and to Congress. But community leaders have found that they are usually ineffective. Now they have begun carrying their petitions directly to the fountain-head of local appropriations—the Director of the Budget.

The District Commissioners may listen to appeals for new schools and libraries, for operation of the District's new incinerator instead of an open dump, for a staff to carry out provisions of the parole law and other essentials. They are even permitted to form opinions of their own as to the improvements and services required by the municipality of Washington. But that is about as far as their authority over the local budget extends. Their recommendations are short-circuited by the Budget Bureau.

Under these conditions why should citizens waste their time presenting their problems at the District Building? Preposterous as it seems, the real czar over local finances has no connection whatever with the District government. As a Federal agency the Bureau of the Budget is a most useful and necessary institution, but as a financial overlord for the District it is entirely outside of its proper functions. If citizens must carry their requests for local improvements to a Federal agency, our whole system of local government becomes ridiculous.

Until the Commissioners are given actual responsibility for formulation of the District budget there appears to be little hope of securing serious consideration of the many improvements that are essential to the maintenance of adequate municipal service in Washington.

Gravelly Point.

Washington's acute need for a modern airport has been studied so many times that the appointment of a sub-committee to investigate the Gravelly Point project does not arouse much enthusiasm. Yet the fact that the Senate District Committee seems to be confining its attention to one site may be significant.

Several years ago Gravelly Point was selected by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission as the most appropriate site for the development of a permanent airport. Opposition to this location developed from several sources. Some Army engineers fear that it is too close to Bolling Field for complete safety, and private interests point out that it is not now as accessible as Washington Airport. The House Military Affairs Committee recently asked the Park and Planning Commission to withdraw its approval of Gravelly Point. But after another survey of the situation that body reaffirmed its previous judgment that no better site for a permanent airport to serve the Capital City is available.

Edwin A. Schmitt, senior engineer of the United States Engineer Office, estimates that Gravelly Point could be expanded to include more than 600 acres, compared with 204 acres for Washington Airport. He estimates the cost of developing Gravelly Point to serve present needs at $2,300,000. A modern terminal at Washington Airport, he believes, would cost $3,556,000. These factors will doubtless be carefully reviewed by the sub-committee, together with plans for the construction of a new bridge across the Potomac that would closely link Gravelly Point with the Capitol. Obviously, the project should be considered as part of the comprehensive plan for development of Washington.

On the other hand, attention should be given to the dangers which are encountered by aircraft using the existing commercial airport. The landing field is divided by a public highway and surrounded by various hazards. It is notoriously inadequate to accommodate Washington's normal air traffic. Since it will require several years to build a permanent airport, even if Congress should approve the project now under investigation, temporary improvements are necessary to guard against accidents.

Continued neglect of the airport situation here is comparable, in some degree, to the exposure of Army pilots to unusual hazards in the transportation of mail. Where human life is endangered failure to employ ordinary precautions can not be condoned. This is an auspicious time for civic and business organizations to press for action on the airport project.

The Story in a Nutshell.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Please accept my heartiest thanks for the most excellent and timely editorial in The Post, pointing out the danger of allowing the manufacture of armaments and munitions to remain in private hands, with the resultant constant tendency to stir up war alarms for profit.

Elderman's cogent cartoon tells the whole story in a nutshell. Take the profits out of war (and put the profiteers in the trenches) and this whole insane, bloody hell will finally be ended. MICHIGAN.

The Post Impressionist.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It was with great pleasure that I noticed the introduction of the new column, "The Post Impressionist," on your editorial page. I like especially the timeliness and the news content of this feature. Any items concerning idiosyncrasies of famous people are always interesting to stay-at-homes like myself. Editorial pages are usually dry and cluttered with nonentertaining stories, but "The Post Impressionist" struck me as being just the sort of thing the page needed to liven it up. MARTIN SHERIDAN.

Travel Has Confused Him.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Returned to Washington after a long residence abroad, one finds many changes that, were one captious, one might call calamitous. A salient example is the attitude of your once wholly innocuous journal toward—I will not say against—Postmaster General Farley L. Johnson.

This public servant is offended, nor, deprecating all losses of temper, can I quite censure him therefor. Throughout my European experience I have always found that governmental functionaries, biddable by the very nature of their unfortunate position, may be won to reason through a reasonable submissiveness.

The Milk Case Decision.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your column on the new decision, permitting States to regulate prices, in violation of the Constitution, is most enlightening.

The doctrine that the Constitution is not a dead but a living document, should not be twisted by the wit of lawless men into meaning that the Constitution can not protect the several States, and the starving and unemployed millions, from the corrupt political and financial system dominating this land. The people soon will reject the sophistries of those grafting leaders who, in the time of plenty, continue to let the people starve and punish those who sell milk for a small price, in order to protect those who are "grafting" the milk producers.

Jobs and the "Little Fellow."

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have been a daily and interested reader of your esteemed paper sufficiently long to become well acquainted with the generous and liberal spirit permeating The Washington Post as a forceful agent for honesty and integrity, and offering, thus, even to the "little fellow" an opportunity of clearing his mind of things of paramount importance to him.

I have been for the past two years without work despite my ceaseless efforts to secure a position. Yet, I am a man in the prime of life, with a comprehensive education and the command of seven foreign languages.

Wherever you go you see the NRA eagle prominently displayed with the proud motto, "We do our part," but no one knows of what his "part" consists. For application, even by well qualified men, for any sort of work at the very smallest compensation is abruptly rejected and almost treated as an insult. I speak from bitter experience. All my applications for employment—and I submitted more than a hundred—were rejected or, for the most part, remained unanswered; if I appeared in person, I was invariably told that everybody was too busy to spare me the few minutes for an interview. As long as this spirit prevails, there can be no hope of combating the depression with any expectation of conquering it. C. C. K.

Constructive Criticism—of Us

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The following criticism is, as I trust you will believe, meant in a friendly way. There is possibly a bit of self-protection involved, as your paper happens to be the first thing to greet me as I wake up each morning. When one's day is started wrong it is apt to be serious.

You have the makings of a grand paper, but in my mind I have been squabbling with you over the "make-up" of the whole publication ever since you started. You scatter news all over without regard to the subject matter and the look of it lacks dignity. I can not seem to find any segregation—dog bites and heart balm troubles all mixed in with real news.

I am no newspaper lady in a disgruntled frame of mind. I am just the general public keenly alive to the possibility of seeing a newspaper here in Washington grow into something big which will take a leading place among the newspapers of the world—if it has big enough vision back of its organization. This city is now about to lead the world in centralization of world action—it is doing it already. To keep in touch with the whole picture in big perspective one has to get the New York papers. That is not the way it should be. You have the chance of a lifetime to jump into a huge vacancy. You can not come within a million miles of it by putting Hollywood in pictures on the front page.

Believe me, I have no axes to grind, and I am writing this in an off moment and in a humorous mood, but I mean it all, and as I have talked with "better men than I am," I have found the opinion not alone my own.

Racial Blocs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Within a few years being just a plain American citizen will be one of the greatest possible handicaps to one in public life or aspiring to public service.

Never before in the history of the republic has racial consciousness been so zealously exploited as it is today. One racial group in this country, egged on by professional organizers, has reached the point where it is more concerned with the hardships of a few of its members in Europe than with the problems of confronting them in the country they have presumably chosen to adopt.

Political rewards in the large American industrial cities are now apportioned on a racial basis. With these prizes before them it is not strange that the American-born children of immigrants prefer to designate themselves as one nationality first and American last.

In Lieu of War Loans.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I hope the proposal recently made in Congress to accept the Bermudas from Great Britain, and the Marquesa Islands in the Pacific, from France, in lieu of the National life saving war loans to those ungrateful countries, will not be taken seriously.

We should never forget that not long ago we acquired the Virgin Islands in the Atlantic, which turned out to be "a poorhouse."

In the Pacific we have had a white elephant—the Philippine Islands—for more than 30 years, and still do not know what to do with them.

I hope and pray the wise men in Congress will bear that in mind and block all efforts to unload more poorhouses and white elephants on this country. We are having enough troubles of our own and should not seek more in foreign countries.

Concerning Dogs.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: J. C. Ransom has my sympahty. When in this column he said, in effect, he would like to see dogs abolished as a public nuisance he made himself meat for the sentimentalists. There will be nothing left of him but hide and hair when the letter writers get through with him. Although I swap affection with three dogs, I can see Mr. Ransom's point of view. The man who with cynical humor remarked, "The more I see of men the more I like dogs" has much to answer for. The literal-minded have made his remark occasion for an intolerable amount of slop.

Nor is Mr. Ransom wholly guiltless. A dog's devotion to his master is a most amazing thing. When he looks into his face and says with his eyes (and his tail), "I'll tell the cock-eyed world this boss of mine is some guy!" can you blame the poor fish for feeling grateful?

I like dogs. It was not always so. I was a city boy and I never owned one. I was afraid of the big ones and I despised the little ones. Nowadays I am just a shade more tolerant. Before you can know dogs you have to raise one from a pup. A dog is the finest companion possible for a walk in the woods. He gives you a chance to see so many things that would otherwise pass unnoticed. Get youself a pup, Mr. Ransom, and be instructed.

Harewood Road Situation.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Washington's extraordinary winter is passing gradually. The winter's four or five notable snowfalls and several freezing rainfalls have rendered an old mystery even more mysterious: What is the advantage of expending fabulous sums on improving park drives (some of which I believe are actually used at least once in a fortnight) to the neglect of necessary and respectable streets?

Ask the taxi drivers, delivery men and business men and women who use the only street for all kinds of traffic between Petworth and Brookland, and the shortest way between Takoma Park and Union Station, whether they know of a meaner, rougher, more narrow and dangerous driveway than Harewood road.

During each of our heavy snowfalls there have been as many as a dozen cars at one time stuck, ditched, turned about or upset, slipping and sliding below the very dangerous curve and on the still more difficult hill near the Capuchin College.

Commissioners are aware of the The Commissioners are aware of the situation, and yet nothing is done about it. U. S. A.

"Let Me Return To My Brethren"

Postoffice, Saturday.

No matter how exhilarating he fought extradition, why should sceptical eyebrows be raised when Samuel Insull says he suffers from nostalgia? It has been our fortune to know three confessed embezzlers; of this trio, two who got away returned home because they were homesick.

To be sure, they were small-town folk. But . . .

• • • •

Jim L. worked in a bank of the Susquehanna Valley: young, trusted, the president's pet, with tastes away above wages. He asked an extra week on his vacation, called on a school teacher he was in love with, the night before he left—left, and didn't come back when his leave expired. The president couldn't believe anything was wrong, but the examiners found plenty.

Jim had a running start. They lost him.

• • • •

"You can't imagine what it is till you try it," he told us afterwards. "You think you're taking a gold-mine, when you take it: it seems like nothing once it's all you've got—you're living on your capital, but you daren't attract attention by bargaining. You believe everybody's a detective. Every chauffeur's driving you to the police station; every policeman's comparing you with the 'Wanted' circular. Every hotel servant's searching your rooms. There's not a sound in the night that doesn't wake you. You wanted to see foreign countries: you don't know the hell why. And there's nobody anywhere you can talk to without thinking of every word before you say it——

"And, O my God, how lonely you are!"

• • • •

At no matter what group of Pacific islands, he was asked to a dance. Another guest looked at him too hard. Jim stepped out, ran to the shore, hired the first fishing-boat he found—he always carried his loot in his money-belt—and made for the next island in his evening clothes.

• • • •

"After two years of it I was an old man," he said. "The worst was the loneliness. I had twenty-five thousand left, but all I wanted was to go home. A fellow that I was going in business with had me out to his house, with his mother and sister, who talked about their old home and the people there, so I had to talk to them about a home that I made up in my own mind—

"I walked to the cable office and wired the bank to have me met at 'Frisco."

• • • •

In the same town, not long after Jim's return, Mr. B.'s private bank—those were the days of them—failed. Most of the local colored folk had all their savings there: we can still see them patiently waiting at the doors which would never reopen for payments.

Mr. B. had influence. He was informed that there would be a well-sustained charge against him of receiving deposits when he knew his institution to be insolvent—that now would be a good time for him to seek parts unknown.

B. wouldn't go. He said he recalled too well how Jim had looked when Jim returned. B. preferred a home jail—and died there.

• • • •

Mr. William H. was cashier of the sole bank in a neighboring village, a man of importance, a bachelor living with an adoring old-maid sister. He was clean-shaven, owned one of those double-chins which fill all the space of the hard collar cut wide for them. Wide were his nose and mouth, his eyes the piercing sort you used to read about in biographies of Captains of Industry. He "looked you straight in the eye," talked "straight from the shoulder." In short, visibly an Iron Man.

One day he started on a trip to Europe.

• • • •

But he never arrived there. He went in another direction, and, so far as the bank's investigators could discover, he never arrived anywhere. Nor were their investigations into the bank's interior much more fruitful: they discovered almost nothing there—Mr. William H. had got about all of it.

However, after a year the detective stopped looking for Mr. William H. After two years, the directors ceased to remember him in their daily anathemas. Town-gossip forgot him after three years. Only his sorrowing, but still adoring, sister thought about him.

• • • •

Then he wrote the Board, not telling where he was, but explaining how indirect communication could be established:

"I'll pay my own fare back—long trip, but it won't cost you a cent: I've got plenty left for that. And I've got some more (he mentioned a surprising amount) which I'll surrender upon guarantee of no prosecution. After all, I didn't take the bank building—and you know I could have if I'd wanted to. So don't think I'm offering to come back because of a sick conscience; it was your carelessness that was criminal. I'm offering to come back and start life over because I'm homesick for the old town."

• • • •

It would be amusing to say that he returned, went into the bond business and prospered. The fact is, though he came back and wasn't prosecuted, he was so worn out by those years of fleeing where no man pursued that he spent the rest of his days on his slaving sister's front porch, swearing at her for not taking better care of him.

• • • •

Along the Potomac

With

Carlisle Bargeron

THERE are as many sides and colors to the automobile controversy before the NRA as there are to a prism. For one thing, there has always been more misinformation as regards wages and working conditions in this industry than perhaps in any other. Its wage rates and hours have usually compared quite favorably with other industries, but it is exceedingly doubtful if they would stand scrutiny on the basis of the work the employes are required to turn out.

BARGERON.

Yet it must be that when William Green, American Federation of Labor head, warns solemnly that unless his conditions are met, there will be a great strike, he means to say that he would do everything in his power to incite one, and he probably would succeed to some uncertain extent. The labor leaders can not be expected to sit idly by and permit business and industry to get the organization which NRA gives it without the workers being permitted to organize similarly. How business and industry can expect to get away with this is more than I can understand.

This brings us right back to the fact, however, that the automobile manufacturers didn't ask for the NRA, that it was forced upon them by the Government.

• • • •

What I really had in mind at the outset, though, and this is the most amazing thing in the whole controversy to me, is that so much excitement should be stirred up by and around William Collins, the federation's representative in the industry. For one thing, I am surprised that "Crack-Down" Johnson ever succeeded in pinning him down to a statement of his grievances.

I saw him perform before the NRA in the first session of its field day of criticism recently. The impression at that time was inescapable that what he wanted mostly was to talk. His testimony seemed to be designed to entertain the audience.

Several times, Johnson, who wanted information, sought to stop him and have him dwell upon a particular point.

"Oh, I don't know anything about the details," he replied disdainfully at one time.

"Naw," Collins replied gayly. "I'm a locomotive engineer."

Continuing, he said proudly:

"Why, I never even knew how to drive a car until six months ago. But I set out to learn how. And I can drive anywhere now. Pretty good, ain't it?"

Undoubtedly, Johnson has since got Collins off and dragged the situation from him bit by bit. The General certainly wasn't enlightened that afternoon.

And I think this is perhaps the key to the controversy in this industry as well as to the other brewing labor trouble. Some of us were quite impressed by the labor representatives serving here on the NRA, Leo Wollman, Ed McGrady, John L. Lewis and so on. We thought they had it hands over fist on the industrial representatives.

But it is becoming apparent now that organized labor was not prepared for the bonanza of unionization which Mr. Roosevelt offered it, while business found it no trouble to organize at all. Lewis is the only labor leader who seems to have been able to keep abreast of the organization of industry. He has been highly successful in unionizing the miners.

The other organizers have been left at the switch. There is a dearth of talent among them. With business and industry now united by Government decree, organized labor is going to have a hard time getting on an equal footing. It is something its leaders should have thought about before they embraced NRA, of course, but it is too late now to think of that.

What will be more fun, apparently, is to strike, especially after the men have been out of work for so long. When industry is determined I have yet to see a union win a strike, even if after the men have been out three months they return and get an increase. For the working man three months idleness is devastating. The employers usually can stand it.

Letter From a Bald-Headed Dad to His Daughter

My dear Louise:

I am afraid you are getting into a rut. You aren't reaching out to find new things in which to be interested.

That may not seem a bad thing now, but it is one of the reasons why certain old people become pathetic simpletons. And the bad effect of it isn't always postponed until old age.

Biology has taught you that nature discards or deadens any faculty or equipment that isn't used.

That rule applies to the mind as well as muscles, and there isn't much delay in applying it.

As a child you had the usual enormous curiosity—the newcomer's normal thirst for knowledge. And later on, when you had outgrown the habit of incessantly asking questions, your natural young appetite for life kept you interested in everything that came within reach.

But already your interests are narrowing and that means you are in danger.

Here is what will happen. You will learn to be content with a few things—eating and sleeping, reading novels, attending the movies, playing bridge with a few friends.

Once that happens, your mind will begin to travel in a groove. It never will concern itself with anything except your few little interests. All other matters will bore you because they require thinking outside of your rut.

And then your mental growth will stop. Whether you are 20 or 30 or 40, you will have the mind of an old, old woman. Life will have nothing more to offer because you will have lost the capacity for anything more.

One step farther and you could sit all day and twiddle your thumbs in blissful contentment.

I am not joking, dear. Look about you and see how many middle-aged women have lost the ability to be interested in anything but gossip and clothes and bridge and the church.

The remaking of civilization interests them not at all, for they can't think of such things. Their minds have dried up.

Keep your mind growing or you are lost. And the only way to grow is to reach out for new material.

Love. DAD.

Daily Talk About Books and Authors.

Eugene O'Neill, Edward Fitzgerald, and Robert Burns.

While Eugene O'Neill was composing the play "Days Without End," which had its first performance in New York in January, he took a vacation by writing a comedy, filled with humor and charm and the spirit of happy family life in a New England home. This delightful play reached the stage in New York last September and with the great actor George M. Cohan in the principal part, has had enormous and continuous success. The name of the piece is "Ah, Wildernes!" and the preliminary announcement of this title caused as many and as varied conjectures as the name of his tragedy, "Mourning Becomes Electra." After the play entered upon its long and successful run and the words in the title were heard in the dialogue, the majority of the spectators knew or were told that they were taken from Edward Fitzgerald's version (version is certainly better than translation) of "The Rubaiyat (Stanzas) of Omar Khayyam."

A Book of Verses underneath the Bough,
A Jug of Wine, a Loaf of Bread—and Thou
Beside me singing in the Wilderness—
Oh, Wilderness were Paradise enow!

Then various persons who loved verbal accuracy called attention to the fact that the original was "Oh, Wilderness" and not "Ah."

Whether this were a bit of carelessness on the part of O'Neill or a tiny slip of memory or what, I do not know; but immediately some one who rather fancied his own shrewdness announced that O'Neill had deliberately changed the "Oh" to "Ah," in order to have his play appear first in the alphabetical list of theatrical advertisements in the New York papers. Although this became quite generally believed there is not a word of truth in it. The playwright had never even dimly imagined such a change for such a reason. So that's that.

But there is another remark about this famous stanza by Fitzgerald that I will contribute to the general discussion. Fitzgerald's version of old Omar is almost an original English poem, and certainly belongs to English literature. Yet I think this beautiful phrase about the wilderness being transformed into paradise was unconsciously taken from Robert Burns. In one of the finest and most affecting of his love songs, Burns used the same idea in almost the same words.

Oh, wert thou in the cauld blast,
On yonder lea, on yonder lea,
My plaidie to the angry airt,
I'd shelter thee, I'd shelter thee:
Or did misfortune's bitter storms
Around thee blaw, around thee blaw,
Thy bield should be my bosom,
To share it a', to share it a',
Or were I in the wildest waste,
Sae black and bare, sae black and bare,
The desert were a paradise,
If thou wert there, if thou wert there:
Or were I monarch o' the globe,
Wi' thee to reign, wi' thee to reign,
The brightest jewel in my crown

Byrd Cameraman Is Operated Upon For Appendicitis

Little America, Antarctica, March 16 (AP).—(By Mackay Radio).—A fire damaged the administration building of the Byrd Antarctic expedition today and a few hours later an appendectomy was performed upon Joseph A. Pelter, U. S. Naval aerial cameraman.

This quick action probably saved Pelter's life. When the operation was performed, it was discovered that rupture of the appendix probably would have occurred in a short time. Pelter is expected to recover.

No End of Books

By

Theodore Hall

Well, if I knew a good quiet South Sea Island, I'd go to it. All this talk of war is getting on my nerves.

"Wars will continue as long as man is man," writes Hoffman Nickerson in "Can We Limit War?" (Stokes, $2.75) and he almost, but not quite, succeeds in making me glad of it. Said Robert E. Lee once, "It is well that war is so terrible—if it were not, we would grow too fond of it!" I suppose, in small doses, Mars offers definite entertainment. And certainly, as Mr. Nickerson narrates with force and nostalgia, there were periods in history when war was conducted in a nice parochial style, like two country vicars playing chess—a matter of professional soldiery and limited objectives. The campaigns of the Roman emperors, the feudal warfare of the Middle Ages, the battles of the eighteenth century waged under the trim banners of reason and decorum—there was no suggestion here of a desire to wipe out the whole enemy bag and baggage. Like as not the embattled gentlemen shut up shop at the first frost and went home for a change of air.

But Greek wars, the religious wars around 1600, and wars in our time of which the late unpleasantness marked an apparently unrealized development—these were something else again. At heart they showed what might be called the Ghengis Khan fixation; nothing was so pleasing as the notion of a populace annihilated.

Of these limited and unlimited wars (terms which reflect the social order of the age), Mr. Nickerson writes a provokingly sensible book. If you like to read of war, buy it and read it all the way through. Or perhaps I can tempt you with something spicier.

• • • •

At the heart of the Nazi military theorists of war stands Prof. Ewald Banse. His book, "Germany Prepares for War: A Nazi Theory of 'National Defense'" (Harcourt Brace), holds as much dynamite as ought to appear in print. The title gives you the entire gist; the text is one of those deadly serious, Germanic discussions to which the Irish in me responds with tingling and irrespresible laughter. I really don't mean to. The book is probably terribly important. But Prof. Banse makes such portentous faces at a lot of very decent nationalities (including the English), and puts in such neat little maps which show lines of attack converging on a helpless country, and altogether sets up such a self-satisfied pother, that the only appeal is to my risibility.

• • • •

Another book you might like to look into appears with the same message, though written from the outside. Leland Stowe, Herald-Tribune correspondent at Paris, made a two months' trip through Germany in the fall of 1933 and emerged with the conviction, pithily put in the title, that "Nazi Means War" (Whittlesey House, $1.50).

If I seem a bit brief with these last two books, it's a matter of foresight. Mr. Karl Schriftgiesser, of The Post editorial staff, is noticing them with considerably more patience in tomorrow's issue.

• • • •

I wish I still had my appetite for war memoirs. Because "Toward the Flame" (Farrar & Rinehart, $2.50), by Hervey "Anthony Adverse" Allen, is really very well done. It has quickness and grace and a kind of light dramatic quality which sits easily between melodrama and pathos. He published it first in 1926. Now it appears sprinkled with admirable little pen drawings by Lyle Justus, which cling to the spirit of the book. There are a few ghoulish scenes, but we should be prepared for them by "The First World War" and its astoundingly wide newspaper syndication.

• • • •

After the weight of these implied or specific war alarms, I feel I owe you some cheer. What I came across last night in the March Reader's Digest may not strike you as a peal from Pollyanna—I offer it only for what it may be worth.

War is getting less and less deadly. Thomas R. Phillips submitted that thesis in an article reprinted from the Saturday Evening Post of a year ago. It is done by statistics. In the Meuse-Argonne engagement one out of every 1,000 participants was killed. At the Battle of Gettysburg one out of every 87. In the charge of the British soldiers up Bunker Hill one out of 11. The prize goes to the Battle of Cannae, 216 B. C.—when 70,000 out of 76,000 Roman soldiers lay dead on the field at the end of the day.

In the next war, I infer, nobody is going to get killed. Or is this a deluded optimism? For I'm not so hopeful as I thought I was. After looking at Prof. Taid O'Conroy's assertion of the bloodlust of Nippon, in "The Menace of Japan" (Kinsey, $3), I'm fast losing faith even in Polynesian real estate.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips.

TWO NEW CODES.

("Notice is hereby given that a public hearing on the code for the Toll Bridge Industry will be held in the Rose Room of the Washington Hotel.")

("National Administrator Johnson has named a code authority for the Embroidery Thread and Scallop Cutting Industries.")

—From recent NRA bulletins.

"A code for the Toll Bridge Industry!" we exclaimed to Elmer Twitchell, w. k. student of goings-on, today.

"Certainly," replied Mr. Twitchell, who seems to know everything. "If there is anything that needs protection in this country today it's the toll-bridge profession. Why, my boy, the competition among toll-bridge workers is fierce."

"You don't say so?"

"I do. It's getting so a small toll-bridge operator can't make a living any more."

"Why not?"

"The big toll-bridge operators are so powerful they crush the little toll-bridge operators," explained Elmer.

• • • •

"Take me," continued Mr. Twitchell. "I'm an old toll-bridge man myself. I began as a toll-bridge auto checker and worked up to head accountant in charge of dimes. If a man was industrious and alert he could get ahead and prosper. But now, since the big toll bridges came in, they cut rates and chisel like nobody's business."

"I had no idea it was so serious," we remarked.

"Why, some of these big fellers are letting three cars cross for a quarter, where the small operator has to get 10 cents straight," continued Elmer. "And they cut rates on bicycles and mules."

• • • •

"What about the scallop-cutting industry?" Mr. Twitchell was asked.

"Have you ever cut a scallop?" demanded Elmer.

"No."

"Then you have no idea what an ordeal it is. The strain on the nerves is terrific. I know of no trade in which the workers burn out as young as in scallop cutting."

"Is that a fact?"

"You rarely see an old scallop cutter. They all die young. I was a scallop cutter in my youth."

"Not really!"

"Yes, sir; and if I do say it, I had few equals. I could cut a scallop quicker than you could say Jack Spratt. I had all the scallops in this country scared of me, when I quit."

"Why did you quit, Mr. Twitchell?"

"It was too strenuous. It brought on a general collapse. That's why I'm for Uncle Sam giving the scallop cutter every protection. But you'll have to excuse me now. I'm off to Washington."

"What for?"

"For a hearing on codes for pinochle kibitzers, iron-dog breeders and sculptors who design ornamental ice for restaurant windows," he replied.

SURE-THING BOYS.

Some of those boys who are loudest in their denunciation of the New Deal are fellows who are accustomed to bringing their own deck.

Elmer Twitchell says the three greatest dangers man has to face today are wine, women and codes.

WILL TAKE A LOT OF CRACKING DOWN.

There is talk of Government control of motor buses, but Uncle Sam will have a real job on his hands if he tries to make one of those drivers move over.

Repeal and the new leisure are responsible for gayer tones in men's attire, the tailors say. It was prohibition and steady work that made you look so drab in the old days, boys.

Statuary Hall Storm Brewing On Banishing of Favorite Sons

Virginia, for Instance, Is Forced to Slight Lee on Washington.

Statuary Hall, until now the peaceful habitat of bronze and marble effigies, soon will become a storm center of arguments about 60 dead men and their careers. The conflict of opinions impends as selection of 30 statues that are to be removed from the historic chamber draws near.

In each case where a State now is represented by two statues, one of the memorial forms must be placed elsewhere in the Capitol. This is in accordance with plans developed by the Joint Committee on the Library, the Congressional unit in charge of the area. Under these plans, designed to protect the hall's floor from being overweighted, only 48 statues finally will be displayed in the space now occupied by 65.

At present it appears that the Joint Committee will shoulder the task of making the contention-inviting decisions.

Suggestion that responsibility of naming the statues that are to be displaced be passed to governors of the States has been advanced semi-officially. But popularity, and even political success, might be jeopardized if the decisions were made in that way, it is pointed out.

Virginia's Problem.

Some indication of the delicate problems that will develop is seen in the situation surrounding Virginia's representation in the chamber. The Old Dominion has statues of George Washington and Robert E. Lee on display.

The situation might be simplified somewhat if effigies of men who served as President automatically be given the right to remain in the chamber.

Some indication of what may be expected to develop already has presented itself in Rhode Island. Newspaper pages there became open forums on the careers and deeds of Roger Williams and Nathaniel Greene, the two notables represented by Rhode Island's presentations. Civil organizations, educators, historians and political figures joined in the discussions as early as last summer, when the removal plan was first outlined.

The entire affair served yesterday to bring into prominence the fact that presence of the statues now in the hall does not comply with the letter of the law. A portion of the law creating Statuary Hall reads as follows:

"The President is authorized to invite each and all States to provide and furnish statues in marble or bronze, not exceeding two in number for each State, of deceased persons who have been citizens thereof and illustrious for their historic renown or from distinguished civic or military services, such as each State shall determine to be worthy of this National commemoration."

Does Art Count?

At least ten of the persons commemorated in the hall died before the States which presented their statues for placement in the chamber were admitted to the Union. Some of them died long before the Declaration of Independence was drafted and others were active in Western areas when not even colonial boundaries had been established there.

This general subject of citizenship gained official attention in 1893 when Congress adopted a resolution "authorizing and granting permission" to the State of Wisconsin to place a statue of Pierre Marquette, "whose work within the boundaries of said State in early days is recognized all over the civilized world."

Whether possession of artistic merit, or lack of that possession, by the various statutes will be a factor in determining which are to be removed from the hall has not yet been made clear. It is known that in some cases the statutes of most notable persons are not considered to be as good specimens of the sculptor's genius as those commemorating lesser luminaries.

Robert Shift 'Mere Routine'

Secretary Morgenthau Says Action No Reflection on Assistant.

Removal of L. W. (Chip) Roberts from the special board for Public Works reflects in no way on Robert, who is an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Secretary Morgenthau said yesterday. Robert was replaced by Admiral Christian Joy Peoples, who has been named director of procurement of the Treasury, assuming some of Robert's duties there.

"The appointment of Admiral C. J. Peoples to membership on the special board for Public Works in place of Assistant Secretary L. W. Robert, Jr.," Morgenthau siad, "represents merely the completion of routine changes in carrying out the Executive order creating the procurement division of the Treasury Department and the transfer of public building activities to that division.

"It does not reflect in any way on Assistant Secretary Robert, or affect his standing in the Treasury Department in any respect."

Husbands Hit

Judge Urges Whipping Post for Wife Beaters.

"I wish there were still a whipping post, so I could send men like you to be lashed," observed Judge Isaac R. Hitt in Police Court yesterday, when he sentenced two prisoners on charges of beating their wives.

Ralph De Board, 25, of the 400 block of N street southwest, was arraigned for striking his wife, Helen, the mother of five children, the youngest of whom is less than a year old. Judge Hitt sentenced De Board to 60 days in jail.

Charles Main, 35, of the 400 block of G street northwest, received six months suspended sentence and a year's probation on a similar charge. He is alleged to have struck his wife, Bertie, who had recently returned from a hospital. The suspended sentence was due to the fact that Main is his wife's sole support.

Gen. Johnson And Budd Firm Bury Hatchet

Just a Misunderstanding, Says NRA Chief; New Labor Vote Set.

The case of the Budd Manufacturing Company, of Philadelphia, which has been regarded as a source of trouble to the Recovery Administration, appeared yesterday to have been merely a misunderstanding.

"I regard the Budd matter as most unfortunate and I think that Mr. Budd has acted in complete good faith," said Gen. Johnson in announcing that a poll of employes would be taken at the plant next Tuesday.

One such poll already has been taken, after Gen. Johnson had ordered it postponed, presumably because it excluded 800 former employes who had been on strike. The vote cast was emphatically in favor of a company union, as opposed to an American Federation of Labor local, for collective bargaining.

Gen. Johnson's order of yesterday is regarded, therefore, as a mere formality. He ruled that next Tuesday's balloting be conducted by NRA officials and that the strikers be permitted to vote.

"I think that the present condition is due to a series of misunderstandings in good faith, that Mr. Budd especially has supported NRA and attempted to comply with the law," Johnson said. "From reports of this organization, it is indicated to me that there is the employe representation desired by a majority of the men."

Soviet Ship Krassin To Seek Expedition

Moscow, March 16 (AP).—Russia's ice-breaker ship Krassin, which rescued survivors of the Arctic dirigible expedition of Gen. Umberto Nobile in 1928, will attempt to save 89 members of the Russian Wrangel expedition marooned off the Bering Straits.

Since the northern route taken by the Wrangel party now is unnavigable, the Krassin will make a dash by the Mediterranean, the Suez Canal and the Pacific—a voyage that probably will require three months.

Postal Lottery Law Liberality To Be Keynote

Farley Relaxes Statute on Sweepstakes and Prize Stories.

(Associated Press.)

The Postoffice Department yesterday said it would apply postal laws governing the printing by newspapers of stories about sweepstakes and lotteries "liberally."

A statement explained "while the Postoffice Department has no intention of nullifying the postal laws or regulations with reference to the printing by newspapers of stories and pictures about winners of sweepstakes, or lotteries operated in foreign countries, it was announced yesterday by Postmaster General Farley that the department will be guided by liberal interpretation of such laws.

The postal laws provide that "no newspaper or publication of any kind containing an advertisement of any lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme of any kind offering prizes dependent in whole or in part upon lot or chance or containing any list of the prizes drawn or awarded by means of such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme, whether said list contains any part or all of such prizes, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier, and provides the penalty for the violation of the law.

"Newspapers dealing with strictly news stories are to be treated liberally, but the responsibility for the publication of anything relating to sweepstakes or lotteries or for any possible violation of the law, must rest with the newspapers."

The President will meet the party at Union Station and have lunch aboard the special train. The trip will be in the nature of a "pilgrimage" to Washington to see the President.

West Virginia Revenue Bill To Tax Stocks

Lubliner Program Seeks to Raise $12,000,000 in State Levies.

Charleston, W. V., March 16 (Spl.) After the House of Delegates deferred action today on appointment of a conference committee on the emergency revenue bill, Delegate A. J. Lubliner (Democrat), Mercer, introduced an entirely new revenue measure designed to raise $12,000,000.

While the Senate request for appointment for a conference committee was accepted in silence by the House, Speaker Ralph M. Hiner (Democrat), Pendleton, indicated he would appoint five members to serve with an equal number from the Senate tomorrow.

Mr. Lubliner's new tax program involves a tax of five mills on each dollar of capital stock of corporations, estimated to raise $4,000,000; a depletion tax of two cents a thousand cubic feet on natural gas production, estimated to raise $2,500,000 and three-fourths of a mill on each kilowatt of electricity, estimated to yield $1,562,000.

New Tax on Beer.

It also provides for a tax of one cent a bottle on beer, a luxury tax on jewelry, toilet articles and sporting goods and increased rates on telephone, telegraph and express companies, estimated to raise $2,232,200.

The Senate passed a bill permitting overloading of small motor trucks with farm products or timber and it went back to the House for amendment concurrence.

The House approved a bill permitting counties with property valuations under $6,000,000 to transfer moneys up to 25 per cent from their school to general expense funds.

Delegate William H. Norton (Democrat), Cabell, introduced a bill in the House authorizing Marshall College to use money collected in fees for payment of a stadium debt.

Kump Sends Message.

Senator Albert G. Mathews (Democrat), Calhoun, president of the Senate, read a message from Gov. Kump, stating the executive would not oppose bills passed by the Legislature, on its own initiative unless they were unconstitutional or against public policy.

The Governor today signed a bill permitting a discount on taxes for the first half of the present year until April 15. The bill also gives the State Tax Commissioner extension authority until May 1.

A bill authorizing the Berkeley County Board of Education to borrow Federal funds for school buildings was passed by the House and sent to the Senate.

Test Farm Plan For Homestead

Experiment Station Near in Tygarts Valley.

Elkins, W. Va., March 16 (Spl.).—An experimental farm substation is planned as a part of the Tygarts Valley subsistence homestead project of the Federal Government. It will be operated in conjunction with the agricultural extension service of West Virginia University.

Horace W. Truesdale, manager of the subsistence homesteads, has been holding conferences this week with officials of the university extension department and formulating plans for the establishment of the station. Experiments will be conducted in different soils with different crops in the valley area to determine their adaptability.

Forty acres of the homestead land will be devoted to this purpose and the site will be chosen by specialists from the university.

Trout Stream Gets Clean Health Bill

Frederick, Md., March 16 (Spl.). Rumors extending over a period of some weeks to the effect that Hunting Creek, one of the best-known trout streams in western Maryland and one of the largest in this county, was polluted, were set at rest yesterday when Game Warden Benjamin F. Phebus, following a rigid investigation, pronounced the stream unpolluted and in good condition.

Mr. Phebus' announcement was made after a conference with the Maryland Conservation Commission in Baltimore which also gave the stream a clean bill of health.

Auditors Report County Officer $89,402 Short

Bristol, Va., March 16 (Spl.). Tennessee State auditors, yesterday reported that Frank Haws, trustee of Washington County, Tenn., is delinquent by $89,402.43. Judge E. C. Wallin, of the county court, called a session for March 20 to consider action.

The report of the auditors followed an examination of the trustee's office, made by A. T. Hull & Sons. The Hull audit for a 23-month period ending July 1, 1933, showed Haws delinquent approximately $66,000. State auditors went back four years behind the Hull audit, and worked up to January 31, 1934, to discover the additional delinquency.

Trout Now Being Bred on Quality Basis

Eugene W. Surber, in charge of the Leetown, W. Va., station of the United States Bureau of Fisheries, points out some of his fingerlings which through selective breeding have attained the size of normal 2-and-3-year-olds. The fish are kept in the new-style self-cleaning type of circular pool, an improvement on the former rectangular tanks.

Fish Under New Hatchery System at Leetown Double Growth.

Leetown, W. Va., March 16 (Spl.). Increasing trout size and rate of growth by selective breeding, disease control, and stream stocking has been undertaken by the Leetown station of the United States Bureau of Fisheries.

Instead of trying to obtain as many fish as possible, the hatchery is retaining only the best eggs, and has increased the fish's rate of growth 30 to 50 per cent.

Under this system, fish have become in one year as large as others raised in two years under normal hatchery conditions, or in four years in streams.

Eugene W. Surber, in charge, is studying trout food supply available in this vicinity. He will determine how many fish can be supported properly by streams. Every fish is tagged.

At the Leetown station, circular, self-cleaning pools for raising the fish are used instead of the old-style rectangular tubs. A flow of warm water keeps the pools clean.

It is also possible to check diseases. With the old pools, fish had to be removed for individual treatment.

Cod liver oil is fed the fish to combat certain scale diseases, when required vitamines are lacking in the fish diet.

An almost extinct fish is being developed, the Montana grayling. Local streams will be stocked with them within a few years.

Differences in habits of trout have been noted. The Lochlaven trout must be pampered more than children when feeding time comes. The slightest outside movement will alarm them, and they will not feed in the presence of an "outsider."

The speckled brook trout, however, rush to the surface when a hand appears over their tank, and Mr. Surber says they will "eat out of your hand."

Bus Appeal Won By Beach Railway

W. B. & A. Protest Against Commission Upheld.

Baltimore, March 16 (Spl.).—Judge Eugene O'Dunne sustained the appeal of the Washington, Baltimore & Annapolis Railway here Thursday for the suspension of the Red Star Bus Line's passenger service from the Eastern Shore to Baltimore via Chesapeake Bay ferries. He announced that he would issue orders overruling action of the public service commission last May permitting this run.

The railway had appealed on the ground that continued operation of the railway was threatened by loss of passengers due to bus competition. Bus attorneys announced they would appeal. Judge O'Dunne declared:

"If the W., B. & A. ceased operation, the 2,500,000 pasesngers carried in 1933 would be forced to seek other means of conveyance."

South Norfolk City Employes Must Pay Taxes or Lose Jobs

Bill Passed Over Peery's Veto by Assembly Curbs Evasion.

Norfolk, Va., March 16 (Spl.).—All city employes and office holders in South Norfolk, a separate city from Norfolk, must pay their taxes or lose their jobs, it was announced yesterday.

State Senator Major M. Hillard who represents South Norfolk and Norfolk County sponsored a bill applying to South Norfolk alone which was enacted by the General Assembly. It prohibits South Norfolk from keeping in its employe any person who fails to pay State, city or any other kind of tax levy against him.

The bill also provides that if any present city official or employe now owes the city any taxes, said taxes must be deducted from their salary.

The bill was bitterly fought by K. C. Davis, jr., South Norfolk city attorney, who was South Norfolk campaign manager for Gov. Peery. One Governor vetoed the bill, but the veto was overridden.

Revolution Bullet Mold, Ancient Wine Glass Exhibited.

Charles Town, W. Va., March 16 (Spl.).—A bullet mould used by Revolutionary forces, a champagne glass thought to antedate the Colonial period, and a "wedding necktie," once an indispensable part of a bridegroom's attire, are displayed at the old Charles Town Library in a collection started by the Bee Line Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

The chapter has sponsored the display to exhibit relics which have been handed down as family heirlooms in Jefferson County. Regent Mrs. F. L. Bushong and Mrs. Van Wilson, librarian and historian, are in charge.

Many of the articles on display belonged to Richard Ransone, one of the original trustees of the corporation of Charles Town.

Also on display is a set of chemist's scales, used, according to Mrs. Wilson, for preparation of medicines on the old plantations, when remedies for the slaves and laborers had to be compounded on the premises.

BLACKIE BEAR

By D. SAM COX

Blackie Bear Meets Billie Possum

WHEN Blackie broke out of Mr. Man's wagon and started for home, his hair was so rumpled up from the harness rubbing him while he was in the wagon, that he didn't want to go near Dr. Coon's house, for fear he would have to tell him what a joke Hee-Haw played on him, and he was mighty ashamed of having to do a donkey's work.

So he took another road up the other side of the creek, and was galloping along as fast as he could

Now, Billie is the greatest fellow for laughing you ever saw, and every time he meets anybody he grins, whether there is anything to laugh at or not. But there really was something to laugh about this time.

A few days ago Rover Dog had found out where Billie Possum lived, so Billie decided to get him another house, and he moved over to a big hollow tree in the edge of Mr. Man's field.

He was sitting in his door and looking at Blackie Bear when Hee-Haw kicked him down, and when Mr. Man hitched him to the wagon, so he had been watching Mr. Man and Blackie all the time.

Starts for Home.

When Blackie broke loose and started home, Billie Possum thought he would have some fun, and so he ran down his tree and started on the road to meet Blackie Bear. When Blackie met Billie and saw him grinning, he thought Billie was laughing at the way his hair was all rumpled up, and so he thought he must make up some excuse for it. But Billie got right after him with questions.

"Where have you been, Blackie, and what ails your hair? You certainly do look mighty tired and hot. You must have been running after a mighty fast rabbit."

"I haven't seen any rabbit," said Blackie, "but I was running a deer and he jumped a creek that was wider than I could jump, and when I tried it, I fell in. That's why my hair is so wet."

Then Billie certainly did grin. That story was funny enough to make a dog laugh, much more a possum, whose regular business was grinning. So Bellie just laughed "ha-ha," and said, "What made all those streaks on your head and across your back, pray? It looks to me like somebody has been working you in harness. You couldn't get streaks like that in the creek."

And then Blackie grinned, too, but it was what you have heard people call a "dry" grin, and he didn't know what to say. But Billie had some more to say, and he said it.

"I know you are awfully ashamed of having to pull that wagon, after all of your big talk about what you would do, but it's too good to keep, and unless you want to make a little trade with me, I'll have to tell the boys about it. I could keep mighty quiet about all this, if I had your sheepskin bed to sleep on, and I don't know another thing that would keep me from making some other folks laugh. And I would have to ride on your back to your house to get it."

"Climb up," said Blackie, "it's no worse than hauling wood."

Court Awards Baltimore Firm $51,348 Assets

Frederick, Md., March 16 (Spl.). Chief Justice Hammond Urner and Judge Arthur D. Willard today filed a decree in circuit court allowing the Fidelity & Deposit Co. of Baltimore to retain mortgages and assets valued at $51,348.51 which were involved in the merger of the Washington Trust Co., Ellicott City, with the Central Trust Co. two months before the latter closed.

The decree concluded a long period of litigation in connection with the receivership of the Central Trust Co. The Washington Trust Co. sought to recover these assets, together with its original assets of $399,647, which were assigned by it to the Central Trust Co., and which the court, on December 22, 1933, ordered returned to the Washington Trust Co. Disposition of the mortgages which the Fidelity & Deposit Co. sought to recover was reserved until a similar question pending in the Maryland Court of Appeals, in the case of the Peoples Banking Co. of Smithburg, was decided.

The mortgages of $51,348.51 formerly belonged to the Washington Trust Co., but in the merger came to be assets of the Central Trust Co. and were assigned by it to the Fidelity & Deposit Co. to guarantee State deposits of $325,000 in the Central Trust Co. In dismissing the Washington Trust Co.'s claim against the Fidelity & Deposit Co., the court decreed that the Washington Trust Co. is entitled to claim as a general creditor of the Central Trust Co., the sum of $51,348.51, being the amount of assigned mortgages, which originally belonged to the Washington Trust Co.

The Central Trust Co. closed its doors two months after its merger with the Ellicott City Bank and the latter petitioned the court to have the merger dissolved on the ground that the Central Trust Co. was insolvent at the time of the merger and also that its condition was misrepresented by the officers who consummated the merger. The Peoples Banking Co., Smithsburg, Md., another branch of the Central Trust Co., also sued to set aside the merger on the same grounds. The court dissolved the merger in both suits and ordered the return of their assets as taken over by the Central Trust Co.

Car Tags Jail Virginia Bank Theft Suspects

Postal Worker Sees Auto Near Office Having Number Sought.

The men, giving the names of G. A. Brawley and Country Harmon, of Columbia, S. C., were driving a sedan with a South Carolina license.

After the theft last Thursday of 13 mail bags, the bandits fatally wounded E. M. Huband, driver of the truck, and fled.

Abe Shockett, secretary to Postal Inspector Webb, today saw a car parked near his office bearing the license number of a car which police believed was used by the bandits. Shockett notified police, who arrested the men.

"I Like It That Way" Opens Tuneful Week at the Rialto—Bookings at Belasco

Roger Pryor a Cogent Player In Flash Role

Marian Marsh Comes Back; New Kind of Preview; Theater Chat.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

"I LIKE IT THAT WAY." Universal picturization of a story by Harry Sauber, adapted to the screen by Chandler Sprague and Joseph Santley, featuring Roger Pryor, Gloria Stuart, Marian Marsh, Onslow Stevens, Shirley Grey, Lucille Gleason, Merna Kennedy, Eddie Gribbon and Mickey McGuire. Directed by Harry Lachman. Reviewed Thursday evening.

By Nelson B. Bell.

Remembering him as leading man with Mr. Stephen E. Cochran's National Theater Players some years ago, for splendid performances in "Up Pops the Devil," "Blessed Event" and his earlier film adventure, "Moonlight and Pretzels"—and if there ever was a bit of off-key nomenclature, that was it—this column admits at once to a strong inclination to look with favor upon any stage or screen enterprise upon which young Mr. Roger Pryor may embark.

Since he has seen fit to embark upon this "I Like It That Way" business, current at the Rialto since yesterday, the picture seems to these eyes perhaps better than it really is.

As a matter of fact, "I Like It That Way" is a story of the night clubs and gaming establishments that has been approximated in dramatic fiber and effect so many times before that it is able to boast none of the tang of novelty among its virtues. It can, however, brag a bit, if it wishes, about the skill with which Gloria Stuart seems to sing a number of catchy songs—and I doubt very much that she really sings them—and upon the added count of having brought blonde, and not too ingenuous, Miss Marian Marsh back to the races.

The Marsh Renaissance.

Miss Marsh, you will recall, was presumably headed for great things on the Warner lot, when, of a sudden, she disappeared from view and is only now beginning to bob up again.

This she does most effectually in the present subject as the kid sister of Mr. Pryor, who, being a young man about the better places, himself, seriously objects to his sister's going in the gay life in a big way.

It is upon this circumstance that the entire action and conflict of "I Like It That Way" depend. There are the usual sinister male figures in the night life of a big city and also the customary jealousies that assert themselves among the members of the merry-merry engaged in dissipating the major anxieties of the brotherhood of tired business men who gather in gay night spots to rub out their worries.

I seriously doubt that any permanent sociological benefit will come out of the showing of "I Like It That Way," but that there is a good deal of lively entertainment associated with the piece can not be gainsaid.

It is a cheap, gaudy and enticing exhibit, staged with considerable splendor and enacted by a cast that could do quite as ample justice to subject-matter of far more intrinsic worth.

Pulchritude Rampant!

The night club scenes are adorned by large numbers of scantily clad young women, who disport themselves in the usual provocative manner and occasionally there occurs scenes in which Drama bids fair to come into its own—but not for long. I should hesitate to catalogue "I Like It That Way" as the authentic and logical successor to "Moonlight and Pretzels." It has neither the originality nor the verve of the earlier musical involving the services of Mr. Pryor.

Mr. Pryor, nevertheless, does his accustomed grand job of biting and incisive characterization in the role of the young man who doesn't quite practice what he preaches so assiduously to his sister. He is believable, amusing and emphatic in everything he does. Marian Marsh, as the youthful beauty who gives up a fair job on the time signal switchboard of a telephone exchange to become a toast of the hot spots, reasserts her right to a place of importance before the cameras and microphones.

Gloria Seems to Sing.

Gloria Stuart as the heroine of all the goings-on creats a wholly favorable impression, although I still am not at all sure that she sings as well as she seems to. If she does, she should have cut loose with John Boles in "Beloved." On the other hand, if Miss Stuart does not do her own singing, then the synchronization must be set down as the most skillful that has been contrived for purposes of both illusion and delusion.

The supplementary program embraces a new release of John Hix's Washington Post feature of "Strange As It Seems;" a new "Goofytone News," which has never seemed to these eyes quite as empowering as it ought to be as a comic addition to any bill; an Oswald, the Rabbit, cartoon comedy, "The Toy Shoppe," and Mr. Graham McNamee's lusty ebullitions concerning the pictorial items that the Universal cameramen conceived to be news events.

This desk seems to have played in particularly tough luck yesterday, having missed calls from Ben Atwell, one of the theater's veteran publicists; Ted Tiller, whose condensed version of "A Trio of Triangles" was presented at the "supper show" at Loew's Fox Theater last evening, with Malcolm Duffield providing a new face in the cast, and a group of advocates of our plan for a Little Theater in Washington. The days we sit glued to our desk, nothing ever seems to happen.

And once we step out to mail the income-tax statement and otherwise don sackcloth and ashes, just lokit!

Essay Comedy.

The amusing comedy, "Welcome, Aunt Mary," written by Madalene Barnum and Mildred Coleman, will be presented by members of the Dramatic Art Class of the Chevy Chase School Sunday night at 8:30 in the school auditorium.

The play is under the direction of Maurice Greet, associate director with Clifford Brooke, of the Clifford Brooke Academy of Stage Training in the Dramatic Arts, who has been assisting Mr. Brooke with the work in the drama at Chevy Chase this year. The piece is described as a delightfully clever farce, with a succession of amusing situations arising from the mistaken identities of several of the pivotal characters.

The cast will include Betty Dennis, of Plainfield, N. J.; Dorothe Fawick, of Akron Ohio; Marjorie Doolittle, of Duluth, Minn; Miriam Neusteter, of Denver, Colo.; Frankie Ricksecker, of Kansas City, Mo.; Marjorie Frankenberger, of Charleston, W. Va., and Margaret Shepard, also of Kansas City.

Reverting momentarily to Thedore Tiller, jr.'s "Trio of Triangles," which I was unable to view yesterday at the Fox over the dinner hour, I am reliably informed that the domestic playlet, executed in the respective manners of Sir James M. Barrie, Noel Coward and Eugene O'Neill, even when reduced from 43 minutes to 18½ in stage running time, scored emphatically with yesterday's twilight audience. Gene Ford, director of stage presentations at the Capitol Theater in New York, especially, was enthusiastic in his praise of the junior Tiller's playwriting and the manner in which it was presented by him, Romaine Stevens and the other members of the cast. Congratulations again.

Preview by Ear!

At present writing, we are four up on the movie entrepreneurs in the Capital in the matter of previews of impending film attractions in the first-run, downtown theaters. As if that were not enough, they have thought up a new one.

The new Twentieth Century film, "Looking for Trouble" that would be a Joseph N. Schenck-Darryl Zanuck production, released through United Artists—starring Spencer Tracy, Jack Oakie and Constance Cummings, will be previewed (sic) over the C. B. S. in "Forty-five Minutes in Hollywood," Saturday night, March 17, at 8 o'clock, E. S. T.

Cal York, veteran Hollywood reporter—whose name, of course, is the first syllable of "California" and the last of "New York," and who could be anybody—also will present dramatic scenes in the personal lives of Hollywood stars.

Now, what we would like to know is how do you "preview" a picture by radio and what other kinds of lives do movie stars live than "personal?"

Authorities differ.

After Wednesday morning's broadcast—which consisted of 15 minutes of ad libbing, reminiscently, in front of a microphone—came a telegram reading:

"Not so good, mister; not so good. Should be shorter and snappier items a la Winchell."

By mail, and as soon as it could get here by Uncle Sam's fastest service, came this:

"Congratulations, your program was splendid."

So what to do?

Signs of Life.

Mr. L. Stoddard Taylor, dean of Washington theater managers, who of a sudden, has come back to the land of the living with the prospective season of Wee and Leventhal productions at the Belasco, scheduled to begin on Monday, stops by to make known that the line-up of attractions for the resuscitated Lafayette Square playhouse will be not only fairly continuous, from all present outlook, but pretty impressive, as well.

Following the opening attraction of Jacqueline Logan in "Three and One," Mr. Taylor sees in the offing "The Dark Tower," a mystery play by George S. Kaufman and Alexander Woollcott, with Jessie Royce Landis, Alexander Clark and Allen Tower; Pauline Frederick in "Her Majesty, the Widow," a sophisticated comedy of smart society; Irene Purcell in "Biography," the Theater Guild success recently presented here with Ina Claire in the stellar role; Queenie Smith in "Every Thursday," a new comedy with music by Doty Hobart, with Leon Janney, and the Jed Harris hit, "The Green Bay Tree," by Mordaunt Shairp.

Quite a line-up, Mr. Taylor and may all your dreams come true!

To Whom It May Concern.

That offer to trade a 15-minute radio period for an airplane trip to Miami Beach, made Wednesday, may be said to be a standing proffer of barter.

So far no takers! What's the matter with the air—whether you're on it or in it?

Proving George White Didn't Corner Market!

While pictorial evidence a few days ago was all on the side of George White's having corralled all of the West Coast beauties for his film version of the "Scandals," this ravishing display of feminine pulchritude would seem to indicate that when the "Fox Follies" is ready for release it will not be wholly destitute of what it takes to make big revues successful. The "Fox Follies" is scheduled for release on March 30 and presumably will be shown here shortly thereafter.

Jesus' Life Was Strictly Local

His Excursion Into Phoenicia, an Extended Trip in Those Days, Is Today a Short Auto Journey; Yet "Provincial" Leader Was Universal.

By William T. Ellis.

I suppose every owner of an automobile has traveled farther from home than Jesus ever went. Admittedly the world's greatest Leader, He was to the end a provincial in His personal activities, only once going outside the narrow limits of His native Jewry. Except for the sojourn in Egypt in His infancy, Jesus made only one trip into a foreign country. That was when, as our present lesson relates, He crossed over into Phoenicia, with its two famous cities of Tyre and Sidon.

To us moderns that was not much of a journey. I have often made it in a few hours by car. Phoenicia lies along the coast line, north of Palestine, and is part of present Syria, under French rule. Tourists now go from Jerusalem to Beirut in less than a day; and few of them, as they travel, think of Jesus as a visitor to Tyre and Sidon.

He went afoot; and doubtless the adventure was fraught with deep interest to Him. Memories of Hiram and Solomon and the building of the temple, would fill His patriotic soul. Nor could He have been without thoughts of Alexander the Great, who built the causeway which now connects Tyre with the mainland. Sidon, a vast necropolis, was full of suggestions of worldly pomp and power. Himself a good Jew, and devoted to the redemption of Israel, Jesus nevertheless must have pondered the philosophy of world dominion, as He looked upon the reminders of it which abounded in Phoenicia. Nor was the glory of the Mediterranean lost upon His beauty-loving soul.

A Great Man in a Small Place.

Nothing is more commonplace than the desire to travel and see foreign lands. Most everybody thinks that if he could know the great world he might do a great work. Rubbish! The great person will be great anywhere. Ponder the fact that Jesus, the one world-figure of history, whose influence even today outruns the progress of civilization, was a resident of a small town, and limited His activities to a small country, one of the least considered of the Roman provinces.

Moreover, He was frowned upon by the wise men of His day as a nobody. "Is not this the carpenter's son? Is not His mother called Mary? And His brethren . . . and His sisters, are they not all with us? . . . and they were offended in Him." All that sounds strangely like the modern, "Why he's nobody; I knew him when——." The comment of Christ, "a prophet is not without honor, save in his own country," has passed into proverb.

On the surface of this condition lies the truth that it is not where we are, but what we are, that constitutes greatness. The lowliest lot in life affords ample room for the exercise of all the greatest qualities—of wisdom, unselfishness, courage and service. A deep truth for all of us who dwell in small circumstances shines out from this lesson.

Unlike Paul, Jesus never pined to see Rome. He was content to dwell with the Jews in their little land, and to express the full power and divinity of His mission there. He made the most of His field. I met a minister in a small Florida city recently who assured me, enthusiastically, that he had the best church in his denomination; and his congregation think they have the best pastor. I really believe he does more good than the average pastor of a big city church. Samuel Rutherford, the great Scotch divine, passionately loved his Anwoth church, which I found to be smaller than many a modern vestry.

What a busy itinerant was Jesus in His limited field! Restlessly, He covered the cities and the villages with His ministry. This long passage from Matthew's record which we are studying reveals the variety of His activities. He fed the 5,000. He walked on the water, after a night of prayer, to succor His disciples. He preached, healed, taught. It was a heaped-up heritage of wonderful works that Jesus left to His church; and not merely isolated instances, to be explained away by clever critics. As for that breed, whom Jesus encountered at every turn, He called them "blind leaders of the blind." We are only now beginning to appreciate the weight of the blows which Jesus delivered against aristocracy—social, political, intellectual and religious.

But to get back to the incident in Phoenicia which the International lesson committee indicates as central to the day's lesson, the plea of the Syro-Phoenician woman for her demoniac daughter. Jesus could not get away from Himself and from His mission. In Phoenicia He did the same sort of thing He had been doing in Galilee. Geography made no difference in His behavior.

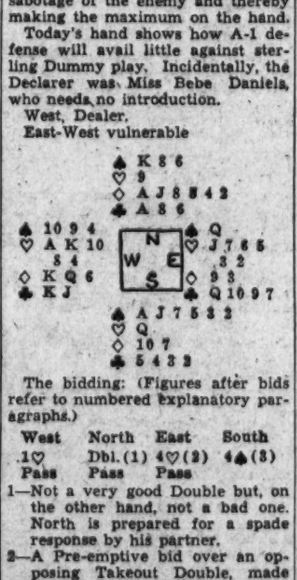
Good Defense—But Even Better Play.

In the play of the cards at Contract Bridge a major object of every player, in addition to his normal procedure of setting up tricks and cashing high-card-tricks, is to try to anticipate what the opposition will do and then attempt to throw a monkey-wrench into the machinery. The other side in turn has to search for means of counter-acting the sabotage of the enemy and thereby making the maximum on the hand.

Today's hand shows how A-1 defense will avail little against sterling Dummy play. Incidentally, the Declarer was Miss Bebe Daniels, who needs no introduction.

West, Dealer.
East-West vulnerable



The bidding: (Figures after bids refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

West	North	East	South
1♡	Dbl. (1)	4♡ (2)	4♠ (3)
Pass	Pass	Pass

1—Not a very good Double but, on the other hand, not a bad one. North is prepared for a spade response by his partner.
2—A Pre-emptive bid over an opposing Takeout Double, made purely and simply in an attempt to shut out the opponents.
3—Naturally South will not be shut out. North's Takeout Double has worked out very well, as, had North merely overcalled with two diamonds and East still bid four hearts, South would be taking quite a risk in bidding four spades.

East and West decided that they had some defense and did not attempt a sacrifice bid of five hearts.

West's Opening lead was the heart King, which was followed by a very brilliant shift to the club King. This play was made in an effort to set up the setting tricks and also to remove one of Dummy's cards of reentry. Miss Daniels, however, quite properly ducked the first round of clubs. West contained with a club, and this trick was won with Dummy's Ace. A low spade was led from Dummy to Declarer's Ace, and the Ten of diamonds was led. West played the Queen and this card was permitted to hold the trick. Due to the previous holdup on the first round of clubs West now did not have another club to lead and could make no play to defeat the contract. West actually did lead another heart, which the Declarer ruffed in her own hand, and now she did not even have to take the diamond finesse but could afford to play for the break since the Dummy contained a sure spade re-entry. The low diamond was led to the Ace and a low diamond returned and trumped, setting up the suit. The high Knave of spade was played and a low spade led to Dummy's King, which removed all the outstanding trumps, and subsequently the established diamonds afforded the necessary club discards.

Couple Sail Today For European Tour

Delattre-Seguys to Be Llewelyns' Guests.

Mrs. and Mrs. Jean Delattre-Seguy will sail today from New York for Europe to remain for two months. They will go first to London to visit Mr. and Mrs. Victor A. I. Llewelyn and then to Paris to spend Easter. Later they will travel on the Continent.

Mr. and Mrs. Llewelyn, whose marriage took place last summer in this country, have been making their home in London since the early fall. Before her marriage, Mrs. Llewelyn was Mrs. Alicia duPont Glendenning, of Washington and New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Llewelyn have recently moved from the house they occupied in Berkeley Square to their own home at 44 Lowndes street, where they will entertain for Mr. and Mrs. Delattre-Seguy.

What Today Means

"Pisces.

If March 17 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 7 to 8 a. m., from 10 to 11 a. m. and from 2 to 3 p. m. The danger periods are from 9 to 10 a. m., from 4 to 5 p. m. and from 11 p. m. to midnight.

If March 17 is your birthday, your life will be happier if you curb any tendency of feeling skeptical about the sincerity of the professions of friendship your friends make to you. Doubting Thomas was a very unhappy chap. Do not emulate his example. It might be advisable never to form an opinion of a person's true worth by their external appearance. Some of the sweetest oranges have rust coated skins. The overly suave individual, with marvelously ingratiating manners, and a Beau Brummel in personal appearance, may be capable of producing the greatest amount of discord and unhappiness. It is a mighty good rule to judge people by their actions and not by their looks.

The child born on March 17, when it reaches its teens, should be taught to use discrimination in selecting its playmates. There is no question but that we are often judged by the people with whom we associate. A child's companions can exercise a tremendous influence over its entire future life. A child is very impressionable, and its behavior, reasoning, and manners are frequently fashioned after those with whom it is thrown into daily contact.

The woman born on March 17 will be successful in love if she will realize that none of us are immune from faults, and that minor ones must be condoned or corrected by gentle persuasion. Irritable or condemnatory comments only agitate and create bitterness. A woman's gentleness can accomplish a hundred times more than a man't gruffness will in trying to have advice accepted. A wise woman knows how to get desired results by suggestions, instead of forcibly by demands. It is also a part of wisdom to consider carefully both sides of an argument, and the one that admits they are wrong gains the other person's respect and confidence, if they know the admission is prompted by a desire to be fair.

The man born on March 17 is, as a rule, an influence for good. He will find it advantageous if he makes it a daily practice to keep posted on the current events of the day. Being held in high esteem by his fellow workers, he has unlimited opportunity to be an important factor in their lives by setting them exemplary models to follow.

People born on March 17 may find it beneficial to remember "He who teaches, learns," for they are the type that inspires confidence, and their advice is often sought. They should take an active interest in educational and civic work. It might be well for them to remember: "Anger is a brief madness," and make up their minds not to indulge in temperamental explosions.

Chef Segelneek Tells of Early Culinary Fright

Gives Russian Pancake and Chicken Cutlet Recipes.

By Susan Mills.

He wiped his face with a handkerchief and sighed.

"It was when I was an apprentice. I had learned all about the different departments in the kitchen, and I thought I knew a lot. One day the head chef was off for the afternoon. He told me to prepare a certain Russian dish and have it ready by 8 o'clock. I was smart, so I didn't get into the kitchen until a little before time.

"I made the dish, and tasted it. I thought, It needs a little more spice. I put in a little more, tasted it, and still it was not right. So, little by little, I put in more and more spice until I thought I had made a very fine dish.

He Is Berated.

"The chef came back, and said 'Why are you late in making the dish?' I told him I had made it, and brought it to him.

"I was very proud, and stood with my shoulders back and my chest out. I thought he would praise me. He tasted the dish, and nearly exploded. He said 'It is garbage!'"

Chef Segelneek laughed, and spread his hands.

"He killed me without a knife!"

Then he shook his head, "I didn't know whether to run away or stick it out two more years, after which I would be a real chef.

"I remember one of the boys in the kitchen did run away. He was told to make some Russian pirojok, the little triangular-shaped pastry stuffed with minced meat. The chef said these had to be baked exactly right; a minute more or less and they wouldn't be good. The boy was told to stand with his hand on the oven door and watch carefully.

Smoke Is Smelled.

"So he stood and stood, his hand on the oven door, and talked to the other boys. Pretty soon some one sniffed and said, 'I smell smoke!' The boy didn't pay any attention, but finished what he was talking about. Then he opened the oven. The lovely little pirojok were burned black—all of them!

"The boy took one look, and left. He ran away from home and hasn't been heard of since. Maybe he is still running!

"But it was lots of fun. I had a good time in the kitchens.

"You see, in Europe one studies cooking like medicine. There is a long time spent learning; then one gets a signed certificate saying one is qualified to be a chef. Some of the examinations are pretty stiff.

Like Operation.

"When I had finished learning butchering, all the cooks stood around, and a live calf was brought in. I had to kill it and dress it, then cut it up and name all the many kinds of cuts. The cooks watched and nodded. It was like a doctor with his first operation.

"I think of all the departments in the kitchen, the one I like best is the meat. I like to cook meats—they are more interesting.

"I have cooked in many night-clubs and other kinds of clubs both in this country and on the other side. I have been all over the world. During the war I was in the Russian navy, a lieutenant. I remember once we were torpedoed by a German submarine in the English Channel, and finally were stranded in Liverpool while the ship was in dry dock being fixed. I had lots of fun there—dates and parties.

"But no, when we were torpedoed—it was not a funny story!"

Kokal Lusha.

"I cook all kinds of things, all national foods, but I specialize in Russian dishes. I have one original recipe for a chicken cutlet, kokal lusha. You take a breast of chicken, and skin it, and remove the bone carefully. Then you cut off the wings up to the elbows," he illustrated the operation using himself as subject, "and remove the meat from the elbow to the shoulder.

"Turn the chicken over, and cut the vein along the back. This will keep the chicken from shrinking. Then make a stuffing of truffles, and cooked mushrooms, a dash of Worchestershire sauce, and butter. The mixture should be quite thick, like paste. Shape the paste like a little sausage, and roll in grated Swiss cheese. Then put it in the chicken and roll it up firmly, dip in more grated Swiss cheese, flour it, dip in beaten egg, dip in breadcrumbs, and fry in deep fat until golden brown. Then put in oven for about five minutes. Serve garnished with chicken livers, shoe-string potatoes, mushrooms, truffles, cooked cauliflower, parsley and put the butter paper ruffles on the chicken's arms.

Strong Tastes.

"No, I don't lose my appetite working among foods. I can eat anything I see. I like almost everything except frogs' legs, lobsters, shrimps and chop-suey. I'll eat them if I have to, but I don't like them.

"But my tastes are rather strong, and since I made the 'garbage' I never season things as much as I like.

"Here is a recipe for Blini Russian pancakes, that are quick and easy to make. The recipe is pretty big, but the housewife can have all her friends in to enjoy it."

Blini a la Russe.

Mix 8 egg yolks, 1½ teaspoons salt and a tablespoon sugar together. Add 3½ cups milk and 4 cups light cream, then 3 cups white and 3 cups buckwheat flour. Stir this well, then add ¾ cup melted sweet butter, and stir. Then add the 8 egg whites beaten stiff, and a cup of heavy cream, whipped separately. Stir gently and fry on griddle greased with melted butter.

Serve with hot melted butter, caviar and sour cream.

By Marion Butler.

Sixty of history's famous beauties have turned mannequins in a Hood College classroom at Frederick, Md., and are revealing to modern women the sartorial secrets of their charm.

Cleopatra stands in form-fitting royal robes beside demure Anne Boleyn and the vivacious Mme. de Pompadour. Britain's Amazon queen, Boadicae, tosses a bear-skin cloak from her shoulder, while nearby, Marie Antoinette flirts behind an ostrich fan.

The array of 18-inch figures in their elaborate costumes represents months of research on the part of Hood College students in a class in historic costume design taught by Miss Lilah R. Gaut, assistant professor of fine arts.

Feminine dress is a reflection of the life of the times and a combination of old and new, Miss Gaut points out. The figurines reveal how fashion often skips back centuries for inspiration.

For example, the fur cloak of the fighting British Queen, Boadice, who led an army against the Romans in the first century, found favor last winter in a shorter version in expensive coats.

It was the flaming red hair of Boadicae that led to the first widespread vogue of hair-dyeing among women. Natural brown and black locks were scorned for decades as a result of her influence.

Origin of Wedding Gown.

Versions of Cleopatra's favorite robe—a short Egyptian tunic that modeled the figure closely—have appeared repeatedly in recent-day fashions. This robe was hand-painted with a vulture motif, the vulture being the favorite bird of the Egyptians.

Research of the Hood College students shows that the short, tight curls at the back of the head that are storming modern beauty salons were introduced by Anne of Austria, wife of Louis XIII, and were called "garcettes." This comfortable style replaced padded wigs.

June brides may thank Anne of Brittany for their privilege of wearing white satin wedding gowns, the class in costume design has discovered. Anne set the style back in the Dark Ages. Previously, white gowns had been the morning garb of the queens of France and scarlet had been the approved color for bridal ceremonies. Anne decreed white for the bride and black for the widow and her fashion decree still holds.

Isabelle of Bavaria was the originator of the exquisite feminine lingerie of modern times, the exhibit reveals. This fifteenth century queen decreed soft linen and silk undergarments in place of coarse woolen ones. So proud were women of these new creations that they slit their gowns to show them.

The figurines of Queen Elizabeth and her ill-fated and beautiful cousin, Mary of Scotland, represent some of the most beautiful and artistic work of the Hood College students. Elizabeth, despite her flaming locks, is robed in the scarlet velvet that she affected, with the curious farthingdale and unwieldy false sleeves of the age. Reproduced from a famous painting, she wears her hair piled high on her head to escape crushing her famous cartwheel fan, and heart-shaped ruffs of stiffened cambric.

Mary of Scots is lovely in the black velvet and rosary that she wore when she knelt at the block. She wears a heart-shaped cap, known as the Mary Stuart hood, which has endured in fashion interpretations for four centuries.

Marie Antoinette wears a version of the famous 3-foot coiffures which were arranged by men hair dressers on stepladders once a month, and often decorated with real fruits, birds, and even live animals.

The course in figurines, the only one of its kind in the East, is a test of the dressmaking ingenuity of college girls, according to Miss Gaut.

Lace from students' own lingerie has been used where hand-made lace was required for the stiffened ruffs and collars of old. Gold Christmas string has been painstakingly embroidered in ancient patterns to reproduce the elaborately corded court dresses of the sixteenth century. Jewelry from a 10-cent store has been refashioned to emulate the famous necklace which Henry VIII gave to Anne Boleyn before his divorce, and the extravagant pearl necklaces, bracelets and ear rings which Queen Elizabeth loved.

This is the fifth year in which a Hood College class has been costuming figurines under Miss Gaut's instruction. A 1935 display is planned to depict the sport costumes of women throughout the ages, and a complete costume series for men.

Half a dozen figurines depicting famous men of history have already been completed.

"But even these few," smiled Miss Gaut, "indicate that the vanity of men in the history of fashion has equaled that of women."

Lemon Squeezer Throws Bavarian Night Club Into Uproar.

Something was astir in the Bavarian night club. Waiters in their amusing short-kneed trousers hastened about, gesticulating excitedly and jabbering in German. They withdrew into a huddle with the dinner-jacketed master of ceremonies. Guests were perturbed. Maybe there was a serious disagreement. Perhaps there might be disorder. It might be prudent to move toward the door. But no—the huddle of worried waiters thinned a bit. The trouble wasn't serious. The only lemon squeezer in the place had gone haywire, that was all.

"One day such a pleasant woman customer asked for one of Mary Roberts Rinehart's late books," a saleswoman in a book shop said.

"I found it for her and what a good story I thought it was. Just as I was about to say what a poor story I thought Mrs. Rinehart had made of one of her other books, the customer said, 'I am Mrs. Rinehart.'

"I still gulp when I think about it."

At one of official Washington's largest, most formal tea parties of the season, Mrs. Rexford Tugwell poured endlessly and graciously for hundreds of guests. Her tea-pouring arm grew tired. She made a whispered request for relief. No one relieved her for many moments. Finally, a young woman secretary to one of the hostesses came to explain:

"Just as soon as I can find Mrs. Tugwell, she'll take your place. I've been hunting everywhere for her."

We knew better than to use an Army classification in one line of the several paragraphs the other day about Mrs. John H. Russell, wife of the new commandant of the Marine Corps. We cheerfully and humbly offer our apologies, while we take a sharp reprimand from the wife of an Army officer, who in an unsigned letter resents the mistake. It is something to know there is such an interested reader, even if she will not disclose her identity.

Few of the dapper mustaches worn on Capitol Hill these days are long enough to be waxed as they were in olden days of meticulous grooming among Congressmen, says a barber who has seen hirsute fashions come and go for years in his shop in the House Office Building.

"We do dye their mustaches, though," the barber confided. "We're often asked to make the mustache a little blacker, a little browner, or even a little redder."

Fingernail polish is commonly applied to legislators' hands, the barber said, but not as yet has any Congressman asked for the colored nail finish.

Now that the drinking of alcoholic beverages has been relieved of much reproach, one writer for the New Deal tells in a whimsical way of a gay week he once spent in a big city. The week's program included a large number of highballs and cocktails and concomitant hilarity.

"I was truly sobered when I returned," he said, "by the news that in my absence I had been made an elder in the Presbyterian Church."

• • • •

Still another New Dealer has an amusing confession for these days of repeal. He was invited to a foreign legation to dinner and for discussion of a phase of the New Deal which particularly interested him. His foreign hosts served wines through the many-course dinner and continued with potent liqueurs. When it was time for a get-down-to-business talk about subjects of mutual interest, the New Dealer was without comment, for he had fallen fast asleep.

Family Hearth Will Survive, Scientists Say

Companionship Real Need in Complex Society, They Agree.

Chicago, March 16 (AP).—What about the American home—is it to be relegated to the scrapheap of outworn institutions?

Some 1,500 members of the Chicago Association for Child Study and Parent Education are of the opinion, after hearing a group of scientists discuss the subject, there is still hope for survival of the old hearthstone.

Said Dr. J. P. Lichtenberger, of the University of Pennsylvania:

"Processes now going on in the family are different only in detail from those which have always existed, and which are likely to continue."

Said Dr. Vivian I. Thayer, educational director of the Ethical Culture School of New York:

Need of Companionship.

"In a civilization as complex as ours, companionship is a real need. To the family of the past we are indebted for much of the true, the good, the beautiful. The family of today can perform the same function if we see the opportunity for new developments of human conduct."

Dr. Paul H. Douglas, University of Chicago economist, sees America coming of age within another generation, and old age coming into its own.

"Those over 50 will assume much more importance," he said. "America, which has always been a country dominated by youth, will come of age and the boisterousness of youth will disappear. It will no longer be a gloomy lot to be old, for life will not begin at 40, but at 50 or 60.

"The family is the only agency which can bring the various generations together. In the future old age will become the friend and companion of youth."

Ideas on Marriage.

In elaborating upon his theories, Dr. Lichtenberger touched on some of the changing ideas of marriage, declaring that no longer is a lasting marriage necessarily a good one.

"The most revolutionary change in the family is the shift of marriage and the family from a coercive to a voluntary basis, with a continued voluntary choice and affection coming more and more to be regarded as the only ethical basis for matrimonial continuance."

In this respect, he believes, voluntary parenthood, or birth control, will lighten the load of overburdened motherhood and eliminate the fear of parenthood.

"Divorce," he said, "does not cause marriage disruption, but is its effect. Family integrity is the main guarantee of its durability."

Feet Beautiful Only in Action

So Says Parisian Who Names Twelve Loveliest Pairs.

New York, March 16 (AP).—The 12 American women with the most beautiful feet were chosen today by Antoine Andre Perugia, famous Paris shoe designer.

Selecting his dozen, Perugia explained that his ideas of beauty in feet were not the usual ones. He admires a foot that has "life and action" rather than one that is merely perfectly proportioned, and a beautiful little foot on a large woman he regards as "terrible and stupid."

Here are the 12:

Marquise Sommi de Picenardi, an American woman married to an Italian and the possessor of "very aristocratic feet."

Hope Hampton, actress, whose feet are not aristocratic, but "interesting."

Mabel Boll, so-called "Queen of Diamonds," who has "exactly the foot of my wife."

Marilyn Miller, actress, who has "intelligent feet."

Mrs. George Mahana, New York society woman and the owner of "pretty feet."

Mrs. Edna Woolman Chase, editor.

Mrs. Anita Baldwin, of Santa Anita, Calif., who has "very well-proportioned" feet.

Mme. Dahlberg, of Lake Shore Drive, Chicago, whose first name Perugia did not know and who has "theatrical" feet.

Mrs. Westmore Wilcox, jr., New York society woman.

Mrs. Frank J. Gould and her "very beautiful feet." "She walks as though she were dancing, like a race horse," he said.

Mrs. Stanley Dollar, of Piedmont, Calif.

"For me," said the designer, half in French and half in English, "the beautiful foot is the foot that has life and action and really belongs to the person. If a foot were cut off from the leg it would not be beautiful; it is beautiful only in relation to the whole body, and in action."

Students Elected To Honor Society

In recognition of high scholastic attainment four women members of the freshman class of the George Washington University have been pledged to Alpha Lambda Delta, national freshman honor society.

The students thus honored are:

Miss Aubrey Yaden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Yaden, 4119 Illinois avenue.

Miss Julia Gemmill, daughter of Mrs. Mary Gemmill, 1632 Thirtieth street northwest.

Miss Verna Volz, 209 Randolph place northeast, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Volz.

The Misses Graves, Gemmill and Volz hold four-year scholarships, which are granted by the University each year to honor graduates of each of the local high schools.

Psychologist to Send Spies Into Territory of Child Mind

Dr. Furfey Wants to Further Knowledge of Children; Lays Faults of Younger Generation to Misunderstanding Parents.

Here's news for explorers who mourn there are no new worlds to conquer, and scientists who think that the habits of all the strange races under the sun have been studied and tabulated. Dr. Paul Hanly Furfey is conducting an expedition into a heretofore unexplored region—that of the child.

"I am planning to send spies into the child's world," Dr. Furfey said yesterday. Dr. Furfey, who is connected with the Catholic University Institute for Reserach in Child Development, is an authority on child psychology, and has written many books on the subject.

"I want to study the relations of children to each other," he explained. "I want to learn about child culture, about their laws and customs. For children live in an entirely different world from ours, and they should be studied as a different race, just as natives on islands are.

"Remember the child in Christopher Morley's book who went into the grown-up world as a spy and reported to the other children, 'I don't like that world, it is too terrible.' Well, I wonder what opinion we would bring back from the child's world."

While no spy has successfully invaded this world as yet, Dr. Furfey believes that constant research and an increasing knowledge of child psychology have done much toward helping understand the nature of the child.

"And one thing certain," he said, "The mother who laughs at her 14-year-old daughter's tears over her broken heart, and the father who guffaws at his young son's announcement that he is grown up and should be allowed to drive the family motor car, need not be surprised when the adolescent grows rebellious and disobedient.

"The first thing parents should do, is to take an unemotional and open-minded attitude to the child. This is not an easy matter for the average parent, but it is essential if he desires to handle the child's problems successfully.

"Then parents should remember that adolescence is soon over, and that the adolescent gradually adjusts himself to adult life. About the best thing that can be done is to leave him to work out his own problems. To tell the truth the greatest thing wrong with the younger generation is the lack of understanding on the part of the older generation."

Dr. Furfey declared that the growing girl or boy is too often shielded from the world and not given the opportunity to adjust himself to the new demands life makes on him.

"A child should be given as much responsibility as early as possible," he said, "this gives him the ability to make vital decisions later in life, and takes his mind off himself."

Coolie's Hat Starts New Style Trend

Perspiring Young Woman in Singapore Swaps Headgear.

Parisian Designers Horrified, Then Intrigued, So Story Goes.

A new fashion has been born.

The manner of its entrance into the world was attended by considerable discomfort—to a certain Chinaman.

An American young woman, so the story goes, was jogging along in a 'rikisha beneath Singapore's scorching sun, on her way to a luncheon. She had not been in China long, and had brought with her the sort of clothes that she would wear for a summer in New York or Washington. But when heat gets into its proper stride at Singapore, the hottest day in Washington is cool by comparison.

The young woman sweltered and suffered. She mopped her dripping brow. Then she noticed that the coolie pulling her 'rikisha seemed to be suffering much less than she, in spite of the fact that his brown legs were flying as fast as they could go. It must be the enormous hat that he wore—a hat of lightweight straw, with a toadstool-like brim and a high peaked crown, that set a little above his head so that air could pass between his headgear and his scalp.

Coolie Got Gypped.

A brilliant idea suddenly struck the American. She would trade hats with the coolie. Vainly she tried to explain the advantages of such a transaction. He couldn't see them. His own familiar and comfortable hat suited him. He wanted to keep it. But the young woman was used to having her own way. After wheedling and coaxing, and ordering, she became exasperated. Grabbing the Chinaman's enormous hat, she clapped it on her own head before he realized what was happening. He was amazed to find a lovely confection of leghorn straw, velvet ribbons, and flat velvet flowers covering his own head. With a hopeless gesture, he picked up the shafts of the 'rikisha and trotted off. His passenger settled back in the two-wheeled cart, immensely pleased with herself.

The adventure was too good to keep. News of it spread to Paris, where designers held up their hands in horror at the idea of a smartly dressed woman wearing an ordinary coolie hat to a fashionable luncheon party; that is, all but a few were horrified. The few did some serious thinking. Coolie hats? Well, why not? And that is how the present Chinese fashions were born—or so the story goes.

In addition to turning out wearable and picturesque versions of the coolie hat, the more daring designers have seized upon the coolie's coat for inspiration. Result: A flock of loose-fitting, high-round-necked coats that strike the wearer just above the knee.

Japanese Kimonas, Too.

If a Chinaman's coat is chic, so is a Japanese's kimona, said other couturiers, proceeding to bring out wrappy garments with big, loose sleeves. They copied bright-printed material, as well as loose lines, with the result that wisteria blossoms, chrysanthemums and poppies ramble over many of the new prints.

For afternoon there are the same big-brimmed hats with peaked crowns, but developed in fine straws.

The coolie hat goes to bed at sundown and is seen no more until morning. But the Chinese fashion continues through gay, dancing hours in short, straightline coats and in gowns with suave, long tunics. And after the ball is over there are Chinese pajamas of amazing loveliness.

Latest Fashion Quirk Is New Variety of Bow

Gay Handkerchiefs Knotted Into Colorful Dress Decorations.

By Ruth Anne Davis.

There came a letter from a local shop asking, "When is a handkerchief not a handkerchief?" and suggesting that we come in and find the answer. It was enough to arouse anyone's curiosity, so down we went. There on a first floor display counter were loads and loads of handkerchiefs that weren't handkerchiefs! They were bows! The ingenious manager of the department had decided that even the humble handerchief wasn't above a little originality, so from a stock of mad prints and appliqued linens she had fashioned little dress bows, all sizes, all colors.

It's possible to buy them already made up, or it's fun to choose your own handkerchief and have it looped into one of the most fascinating dress decorations of the season.

This new scheme enables us to buy tailored or fluffy bows, in any color, or colors we want. The price depends on our choice of handkerchiefs.

Lavender Line.

A manufacturer of cosmetics questioned a large number of women about which fragrance they preferred in powders, colognes, &c. He learned that the majority of them liked lavender.

With that the manufacturer went to work. The results are at hand now—a complete line of lavender cosmetics. There's soap, eau de cologne, bath oil, dusting powder, and so on, all with the same light, refreshing lavender scent.

These are available in a downtown store.

Combination Cheese.

The young man in charge of a local food shop was displaying a large assortment of cheeses. Each kind, it seemed, had its own selling point, its own mark of individuality. Finally, though, he came to one small package and he hesitated.

"This is a Norwegian cheese," he said. "It isn't particularly spicy. But it isn't mild. It's not a hard cheese. But it's not creamy, either." He groped for some mark of distinction. Finally, his face brightened, and he continued with renewed confidence. "This is a cheese," he declared, "that tastes like a combination of all cheeses!" And the funny part is, it does! One package sells for 25 cents.

Bright Combination.

Breton sailors and off-the-face hats shown in a local shop are a riot of polka dots. The simple severe lines of the one, the halo effect of the other, suit them to either the tailored or frilly type of person.

Along with these soft silk-crepe hats come short jaunty neck scarfs to match. Just at this season of "before spring but after winter" it's a relief to be able to don a little brightness and lightness. A combination such as the scarf and hat would look well with a new spring coat, and go a long way toward giving the winter wraps a renewed chic.

Cross-Stitch Jewelry.

One of the most interesting displays of the week is the white jewelry designed with small, painted cross-stitch to resemble peasant handiwork. This is arranged on a linen cover filled with fantastic cross-stitch patterns.

There are earrings, bracelets, clips and pins, all of them most pleasingly priced.

White jewelry of this type will be attractive with the dark suits we'll be wearing for a while yet.

Nippon Cocktail Crackers.

The original Japanese cocktail crackers combine many cocktail qualities. They're neither too salty nor too brittle, too this nor too that. But they're excellent served with any kind of beverage. They're made of sweet rice, seasoned with soybean sauce and dried to crispness in the sun.

Little individual dishes of them, or one large bowl brimful, add a finesse to any cocktail, highball, or glass of beer.

Weight Worriers.

Yesterday's mail brought three letters from women who complained of having gained weight during the winter. They all ask "How can we reduce without dieting?" M. May writes that she doubts the possibility, but has hopes.

Dear M. May, Sara and E. G.: If you have merely picked up a little weight it shouldn't be hard to lose it without dieting strenuously. During cold weather we are apt to gain weight because we do not exercise as much as we should.

So, first of all, start a daily dozen, or at least long daily walk. Instead of ruling out certain foods, just eat a little less at meal time than you really want. And, of course, do try and say "no" to whipped creams, rich goodies, candies and pastries. Luck to the three of you!

Dainty Fruit Salads Good For Desserts and Snacks

Different Dressings Make Variety, or Can Be Served in Gelatin.

By Ann Barrett.

Two occasions, at least, when fruit salad proves especially welcome: At the end of an informal dinner, and as a bridge-party snack. Served plain with good dressing, or molded in gelatin, they present so many grand possibilities, screen star Laura La Plante isn't the only one to wish she had time to explore them all.

Several points to keep in mind about these dessert-salads. First, they should be sweeter than ordinary. Second, they should be daintier. Whether you slice, dice or shred the fruit, do it in a clean-cut way so fruit will not be in the least mushy.

Fruit Salad Dressings.

Third point: Dressings for dessert-salads should be very delicate. Like whipped-cream mayonnaise, for example (half and half whipped cream and mayonnaise with a little lemon juice). Or banana dressing, like this: To 1-3 banana pulp (after putting banana through sieve) add 1 teaspoon lemon juice and ¼ cup confectioner's sugar. Then fold in ½ cup mayonnaise and ¼ cup cream (already whipped).

Another delicious dressing for dessert-salads goes this way: First beat up 1 whole egg or 2 egg-yolks in top of double boiler. Then slowly beat in 1-3 cup strained honey (first heated to boiling point). Cook this mixture over hot water several minutes. Then add ⅛ teaspoon salt, 2 tablespoons olive oil, 1½ tablespoons lemon juice. Next whip ½ cup heavy cream (sweet or slightly sour). Chill both, and combine just before serving.

Bunch-of-Grapes Salad.

When you want a tricky fruit salad that's not molded, here's what: Drain juice off 4 large, choice canned-pear halves. Then work ½ cup cream cheese very soft with a little cream. Next, turn pear halves rounded-side up and spread them with this softened cheese. Then halve and seed about 2 cups large Tokay grapes. Press these into the cheese on the pear, with the pointed end of grapes toward smaller end of pear. Insert a piece of preserved ginger about 2 inches long and ⅛ inch thick into stem end of pear. And there's your bunch-of-grapes salad—complete except for chilling, setting on lettuce leaf, and serving with whipped-cream mayonnaise.

1 pound hard, small cooking pears
1 pound potatoes
2 ounces butter
1 ounce sugar

Strain and add to pears. Place the bacon over all, pour the stock or water over it, cover and allow to cook three-quarters hour. If necessary add more water, but it must be almost dry when served.

Girls Improved By Depression

New London, Conn., March 16.—The depression has left its mark on American college girls, Mlle. Louise Chevalier, assistant in the French department in Connecticut College, has found on returning from France after an absence of four years from the United States.

Mlle. Chevalier said that five years ago when she first came to this country, Connecticut College girl students were "taking it easy" in their studies, working "en amateur," but that now they regard their work "far more seriously."

"Even those who don't need a career now consider their work as a necessity to advance successfully in life and no longer as a mere pleasant luxury.

"This is certainly one good thing the depression has brought forth," she said.

Beggars All

By Katharine Newlin Burt

Madrone had begun to speak again, faintly. "I do not understand. It is strange. Always you were one step ahead of me, always from the beginning. I send you to the island for my purpose; you come there already for your own. I wish to force you to introduce this stranger, this outsider, to Chetteraw; you do it already by means of your cousin, by your own will. And so I wish to break the friendship of you and of Crewe; of your own will you strain it with love, ambition, jealousy, and save it by loyalty that lasts somehow. Now before I can force you to marry, to steal his bride from him, to kiss her before his eyes, my gun upon you, making a coward even in the eyes of your wife, you have already married her. Very bravely. With a great carefree love. Yes. Yes. Before I can spit upon your pride, you who know already who and what she is have taken my girl into your arms, have honored her. You tell me that you know and that you do not care. Have I heard right, Courvoisier?"

"Yes. That's true. All of it. I haven't got the sort of pride that was my father's. I have another sort of pride. In your revenge you have spat beside the mark."

A sudden beating as of a quick, fiery pulse shook the darkness. Madrone fell back and Rafe bent to his oars.

He glanced back. The lights were nearer than he had dared to hope. They had a chance. He threw all that was left of his strength into the agony of action.

Madrone swore or prayed. The pulse heightened, droned, roared closer, circling them, droning away, lacing the black harbor water. The pursuers had fortunately at once overshot their mark so that the possible silhouette against the harbor lights was lost.

The cracking of gunfire split up their silence. Bullets struck the surface of the sea.

All at once they were safe. They had come too close to the city and the murderers stopped firing. The pursuit drew off. The boat's bow struck against the piles of a low wharf. Madrone whistled weakly, twice. A light shone down into their eyes.

"Who's that?"

A fat man in shirt sleeves was bending down from the wharf. Rafe caught at his arm and pulled himself up carefully.

"You, Michele!" gasped Madrone. "I'm hit, man. Get me up out of this boat."

"You got a telephone?" asked Rafe.

"Show Him the Telephone."

"Inside there. Maria will show you. Go round to the side door. Avoid the restaurant, please, sir. Friend of Madrone's, Maria. Show this gent the telephone."

Maria took Rafe by the arm and he managed to grope his way to the telephone.

"Police headquarters? This is Rafe Courvoisier speaking. From Candle Island. Send all the men you have. Motor Boat. There's been a holdup. Miss Kendall's wedding party. They've taken to their boats. Island first. Clean up that swamp, follow down the coast. If you don't overtake them, I can give you information of their whereabouts. Take no chances. They're armed."

The receiver fell from his fingers. He found himself presently seated at a table, Maria had brought him a strong liquor. After a while he was able to go out.

Madrone raised his finger. "No. No. I won't last till he gets here. Bend down closer—Courvoisier."

Rafe obeyed. "Madrone," he said slowly, "I owed you a long debt. This was the very place where my father and his friend destroyed your life for their own amusement. Will you forgive him in my name for what happened to Hortense's mother and to her father, here on this same wharf, 20 years ago? For what you have been and done since with that ruined life, I must in my father's name assume a partial responsibility."

Madrone did not listen.

Deathbed Promise.

"I beg—I beg you," he was muttering. "She does—not know. She does not know she is my daughter. I beg you never to tell her."

Rafe said, "I promise you."

"Her mother will be happier for that, I think. And her children. See, now, the fortune is all yours. Jay will understand. I liked you. I liked you—in that city. . . . I wanted you then for my child. It was not only vengeance. But Courvoisier, I beg——"

On that word which carries the piteous ultimate breath of all humanity, this beggar went on his way and the door of life's golden storehouse closed upon his sight.

It was too late for the mocking bird's courtship and the wistaria no longer bloomed, but Rafe Courvoisier, walking down the alley, had no need for music nor for perfume to enhance the magic of the dawn. All the rattle and the rumor of pursuit had vanished from the clear rainbow surface of the sea. The guests of that unlucky wedding party had been delivered safely to their homes.

Rafe came out at the end of the alley and found a boy asleep there in a boat. He smiled, remembering.

"Can you take me out to Candle Island, boy?"

"Yes, sir, Mr. Courvoisier."

Steps Into Boat.

Rafe stepped in and sat down in the stern. He looked across toward the green shores, toward the tall white columns of the house above its trees. Rafe knew this island, and as he drew nearer he began to breathe its heavier sweetness. They ran in upon a hooded beach, where he dismissed his boatman. His knees were shaking as he mounted slowly through the dewy shadows of a path until he could see the house. Down a path that would presently, he realized with heart-pounding, be sure to meet his own, there came swiftly the figure of a girl. She saw him, stopped an instant, then called aloud in a clear voice and ran toward him.

Rafe stopped, held up high his lean, bright head and waited for her. He could see her, the strong body, the sweet, wild look, her skin like a magnolia petal, her strange brows, her beautiful rich mouth, even the eyes now, as blue as gentians and warmly deep. She was strong and very beautiful.

Rafe did not know that he had stepped forward and held out his hands begging for her loveliness, but he knew that he loved this woman, that he had been born to love her. He knew, having fought his way to them through the fires of fear and hate and vengeance, that now the woman and the island were his own.

Radio Waves and Ripples

WJSV discovered yesterday that sometimes advertising does not pay.

The minds at the Columbia station thought it would be a very good idea if they broadcast the Senate Postoffice Committee's hearings on the air mail bill, particurly inasmuch as Lindbergh and Chamberlin were the witnesses. They also thought it would be a much better idea if National did not broadcast the proceedings.

It would have been a scoop and the minds were in a frame for scooping. They also were in a frame for letting people know how bright they were going to be.

And that was just bright enough to tip their hand to National thinkers who rushed an announcer, a couple of engineers and a lot of equipment over to the Senate just in time to make it a twosome.

FOR the first time in the history of radio two sponsors previously engaged in advertising their totally dissimilar products separately have joined for the broadcasting of a single program.

The union merges Fred Allen's Revue (salts) and the Troubadours (toothpaste) in a one-hour program on N. B. C. Allen will continue as head of his own company of comic mimes surrounded by a musical organization of elaborate proportions, including Theodore Webb, the Troubadour, a mixed chorus of 8, a male glee club of 12, the Songsmiths and Lennis Hayton's Orchestra.

Columbia and Radio Retailing have been jointly counting radios just to see where they stand after the depression. Frankly, the result astounds us. If Columbia and Radio Retailing weren't pretty conscientious people we'd be inclined to suspect some one of trying to get radio salesmen to go out and work harder. Fifty million homes in the United States and only 17,950,000 of them equipped with radios, a ratio of about 1 to 4? You won't believe it either when the weather warms up a bit and people begin leaving windows open.

Bureau Hits Fraud in Rum Ads; Ask Curb

Beverage Control Body Gets Complaint of Business Group.

Out of Town Firms May Sell Here if Paid in Advance.

Misleading liquor advertisements may be made the subject of a prohibitive regulation as a result of a complaints to the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board by the Better Business Bureau, which claims merchants are advertising in an improper manner.

Louis Rothschild, director of the bureau, yesterday complained to George W. Offutt, chairman of the board that liquor dealers are printing unethical advertisements, which are misleading as to the size of bottle, and quality of beverage.

"In one instance," Mr. Offutt said, "it was shown that a firm advertised a certain brand of liquor at an extremely low price and investigation showed that the advertisement failed to state the whisky was a "blend."

Under the law, Mr. Offutt explained, the board has no control over the manner in which merchants advertise their liquor wares but Rothschild expressed his intention of asking the Commissioners to promulgate a new regulation, which would vast power in the board to require truthful advertisement.

New Deal for Drunkness.

A shift in policy of the board, under which anyone convicted of drunkness may not now secure any type of license, was indicated yesterday by Mrs. W. Beverly Mason.

"I don't believe that anyone who has been convicted of drunkenness should be barred from obtaining a license", she said. "I think they should be given another chance. If there had been no prohibition, the chances are they would never have become drunk."

The board today will begin hearings on applications of merchants who conduct establishments in the vicinity of school buildings. The cases will be the first to be heard since the board announced its policy of denying such applications unless the applicant can show by a preponderance of evidence that issuance would be "appropriate."

Under a ruling announced yesterday, distilleries beyond the District may sell beverages to local consumers if orders for the liquor are accompanied by cash payment. However, if the liquor is paid for on delivery in the District, the seller will be required to obtain a District license.

Ballou Thanks Board.

There will be no sales tax imposed on any liquors delivered here after payment has been forwarded to the distillery, the board ruled, because such a transaction would constitute a sale beyond the District limits.

Superintendent of Schools Frank W. Ballou, in a letter to the board yesterday, expressed his appreciation of its action regarding licenses in the vicinity of schools.

School authorities, he said, will cooperate with the board in the investigation of all requests for permits which might affect pupils. Protests were filed by school authorities yesterday against the issuance of licenses to John R. Quinn, of 3128 Nichols avenue southeast, because it is in the vicinity of the Congress Heights School, and Sol Arnoff, of 1835 Ridge road northeast, which is near the Blow School.

Retailer Complains.

The board yesterday began an investigation of a complaint that a distillery had refused to furnish products to a local retailer because the latter cut his price. Chairman Offutt said he would submit the facts to the District Commissioners and to the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, if the story is substantiated by further investigation.

Tax receipts for beer in the past year amounted to $145,853, according to a report made public yesterday by Charles Russell, deputy assessor of taxes. All of the 3.2 beer taxes have been collected except $82.28.

Mrs. D. P. Collins, 4608 Norwood drive, Chevy Chase, is a newcomer in Washington. A stranger in town, she wasn't sure of the best method of renting the extra room in her new home. What to do?

Luckily she hit upon the idea (or perhaps someone who already knew told her) of a Classified ad in The Washington Post, for just one day. The ad appeared, and so did someone who rented the room, for $35 a month. Total cost to Mrs. Norwood: 45 cents.

The moral to this story is obvious. If you have a room to rent, let The Post help you. Just call

Post Staff Photos.

Serum Will Be Devised for Ten Youngsters Facing Death.

By Robert T. De Vore.

A score of boys and girls were excused from school and became heroes at home yesterday by the entirely fortuitous process of recovering from measles.

They were the children who offered their blood that ten less hardy youngsters in Children's Hospital might live. A few weeks ago they were sick with measles; too, but they got well.

But a young lady's or man's notion of heroics and what constitutes a holiday may undergo appreciable alterations at the sight of a few nurses, an interne or two, bandages and hypodermics, and the sound of babies crying, frightened and in pain, and the smell of ether, alcohol and formaldehyde.

Accompanied but not prodded by mothers, proud and beaming, they came from early morning until late afternoon, smiling, chatting, in a carnival mood. But sights and sounds and smells, altogether strange and terrifying, subdued them into a semblance of children condemned, sitting on a long bench waiting, as it were, their executioner, and strongly desiring, no doubt, the sunshine outside.

Nora Jane Arrives Alone.

Sitting on one end of the bench alone and unhappy was Nora Jane Weir, 10. No father or mother brought her to the hospital. She came alone without benefit of parental backing, because, she said, she thought it was "the thing to do." And she stayed, though a little frightened, and was one of the first to enter the laboratory where white-clad nurses were doing their best to make blood drawing in a hypodermic syringe a totally indifferent and unobtrusive process.

Most of the self-condemned went through with the business just as though they were used to being heroes, as Nora Jane did. She didn't cry, only grimaced a little at the needle and looked relieved when it was withdrawn. There were a few protesting tears, but their most serious consequence was to make one or two mothers look suspiciously like originators of the philanthropy, an embarrassing circumstance at least.

Five Give Blood.

Of the score who came for test, only a few were obliged to give the blood that will be used as serum to combat germs menacing the lives of ten children. Most of them were turned down because they were too young or because, like Norah Jane, blood letting didn't agree with them.

The donors were Barbara Gray, 11, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Gray, of Edgemoor, Md.; Norman Lee Sloane, 11, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Sloan, of Mount Rainier, Md.; Robert Sandbeck, 12, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Edwards, 334 Seventeenth place northeast, and Neil, 12, and Billy Collier, 10, sons of Mr. and Mrs. N. Rex Collier, of Lyon Village, Va.

From five adults, hospital attendants were able to obtain 500 cubic centimeters of blood required to cure the critically ill ten. Hospital authorities expect today to know what benefit may be expected by the treatment.

3 Hurt at Hagerstown When Cars Collide

Hagerstown, Md., March 16 (Spl.).—Two persons were seriously injured near the Hagerstown Airport today when two cars collided.

Charles Burger, 29, of Funkstown, and Nat W. Emerson, of West Newton, Mass., the drivers, and Mrs. Emerson are in the hospital here. Burger has a fractured skull, Mrs. Emerson a broken wrist and Emerson numerous facial lacerations.

Roanoke City Car Tags Bought Under New Scale

Roanoke, Va., March 16 (Spl.).—Roanoke automobile owners today are paying 18 cents per hundred pounds for city automobile licenses instead of 25 cents per horsepower as formerly. With a minimum charge of $4.50 for most cars the rate is a material reduction.

'Members Only' Sign Is Posted In House Cafe

Waiter Is Discharged by Manager Following Serving Reporter.

The posting of a sign, "For Members Only," over the entrance to the public restaurant on the House side of the Capitol and the discharge of a waiter who served a colored guest was the answer yesterday of the North Carolina management to the campaign to gain admission of colored guests to the restaurant.

Upon order of Lindsay Warren (Democrat), North Carolina, chairman of the House Accounts Committee, the sign was posted as an obvious move to bar colored guests. Although Warren said the ban would apply to white persons as well, Peter Johnson, manager, hinted it would not, and waiters said that white persons were admitted without question after the sign had been posted.

The discharge of Harold Covington, a junior at Howard University, living at 516 T street northwest, was ordered by Johnson after Covington had served a reporter for the Afro-American, Negro newspaper, who is also a student at Howard University.

Police Escort Given.

A sergeant of the Capitol police escorted the reporter from the restaurant after the incident.

Covington said he was told that he was fired "because he served a colored person." Johnson declined to explain his action, and referred newspaper men to Representative Warren, but Warren refused to assume the responsibility, and stated that Johnson has "full authority to employ and discharge waiters."

In the presence of a reporter, Johnson told a colored man who asked whether he would be admitted to the restaurant, that he would not. When the inquirer asked the reason, Johnson said: "Because you are a Negro."

Meanwhile, Representative Oscar De Priest (Republican), Illinois, was collecting signatures to a petition to discharge the Rules Committee from consideration of his resolution to investigate the management of the House restaurant. Signatures must total 145 before the matter can be acted on in the House.

De Priest Declines Aid.

De Priest declined, however, to come to the aid of the colored persons who were refused service in the restaurant, explaining that his protest "would do no good and only cause trouble."

Earlier in the day a colored woman, accompanied by white women, was refused service in the restaurant, and there was a rumor that a delegation from Howard University would challenge the Warren ban.

The order was the first time that an attempt had ever been made to bar the public from the House public restaurant.

Lorton Inquiry Into 'Partiality' Will End Today

Shoemaker, Too Busy for Other Sessions, Promises He Will Attend.

Unless new evidence is furnished the committee, the probe of conditions at Lorton Reformatory will end with this morning's session. Representative Shoemaker, whose accusations of widespread graft and corruption at the District prison inspired the investigation, has promised to attend.

The Minnesotan had been asked to attend yesterday's meeting of the committee, but he telephoned to say that he was too busy. Witnesses heard yesterday were Marion C. Hargrove, District purchasing officer, and Charles H. Kidwell, from the District auditor's office.

Hargrove testified mainly on the method used for purchase of supplies and equipment by the penal institutions. He said he never knew of specifications being prepared in the interest of particular bidders and that his suspicions never were aroused by orders from the reformatory.

Kidwell told of making several audits of the reformatory books. He affirmed statements of C. W. Hanger, the Lorton accountant, in regard to writing off of a shortage in the prisoners' welfare funds.

At the close of the meeting yesterday, Chairman W. W. Millan summoned George E. Muth, patent attorney, to appear today. Millan said Representative Shoemaker had informed the committee that Muth had seen Edmund D. Rheem, convicted broker, away from the prison.

Muth last night told The Post that he knew nothing about the matter, and had not seen Rheem.

Research Reveals Figure Was 10% Back in 1790.

The Irish in this country are more than holding their own, and statistics that command interest on St. Patrick's Day prove it.

Back in 1790, according to the American Council of Learned Societies, approximately 10 per cent of the white population of the United States was Irish. Today persons of Irish stock form approximately 11 per cent of the total white population, census tables show.

The study of the 1790 population was based upon prevalence of Irish names among persons in the United States more than 14 decades ago. The names of 105,254 children born in Ireland in 1890 were tabulated and analyzed. More than two-thirds had names which appeared more than 50 times in the group. The investigators finally concluded that 185 of those names could be accepted as "pure Irish." And what names they are!

Brady, Brennan, Burke, Carroll, Dolan, Fitzpatrick, Flanagan, Flynn, Kenny, Lynch, Egan, Conroy, Quinn, Sweeney, Moran, Malley, Gannon, Geraghty and Dowd.

The next step was to find out how many persons bearing the 185 selected names were living in the United States in 1790. And here is the way the total number of heads of families bearing the dsitinctively Irish names was distributed then.

Pennsylvania, 481; North Carolina, 398; Maryland, 310; Virginia, 253; South Carolina, 196; New York, 169; Massachusetts, 105; Maine, 86; Connecticut, 50; New Hampshire, 49; Vermont, 47, and Rhode Island, 14.

Immigration from Ireland dropped from 780,719 during the decade 1841-1850 to 197,146 during the 1921-1929 period, census records show. The famine from 1846 to 1851 is credited with the size of the total in the decade ended 1850.

Mary Purdy, "Gold Chest" Owner, Dead

Fantastic Case Held Society's Attention 2 Years Ago.

Death yesterdaty ended the colorful career of Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Purdy, 60, who, with her husband, Dr. LeRoy Purdy, was awaiting trial in the "gold chest" alleged swindle here almost two years ago.

Mrs. Purdy died in Gallinger Hospital, where she had been taken from the District Jail, ten days ago, after her condition from a heart ailment—coronary thrombosis—became critical. During the six months she was in custody here Mrs. Purdy, who in 1932 moved in a select social circle with her husband, was too ill even to be arraigned. The charge against her was obtaining money under false pretenses.

Dr. Purdy was in jail when his wife died.

Thursday afternoon Mrs. Purdy's condition became worse, and early in the evening Dr. Purdy was taken from his cell to the hospital, where he stayed several hours. A physician was with the aged woman when the end came.

Legacy Story Reaches Police

Officials at the jail informed Dr. Purdy of Mrs. Purdy's death shortly after it occurred. He made no comment. Her body was removed to the District Morgue. Later it will be cremated, according to an arrangement made with Dr. Purdy before her death. No definite plans for last rites were made.

The Purdys came to Washington late in 1931, and stayed at the Wardman Park and Shoreham hotels.

In January, 1932, they were accused of obtaining more than $10,000 from Mrs. Lawrence Kay, of the 1800 block of Mintwood place northwest, for transportation of a chest of gold containing $60,000,000 from England, claiming they had inherited this vast fortune. They said $10,000 was necessary to bring the money into this country.

They visited in the homes of Washington society during this time, and were well known in the fashionable places of the city. In April, 1932, Mrs. Kay is said to have about become suspicious their continued delays in producing the fabulous fortune, and told her story to Assistant United States Attorney Charles B. Murray and Detective Sergt. E. P. Hartman.

A search for the Purdys led officers from New York to Montreal, and from Montreal to California.

Last summer the couple were found in Detroit. Mrs. Purdy was bedridden, but detectives returned Purdy to the Capital, where he pleaded not guilty to an indictment charging him with obtaining money under false pretenses.

On September 23, Mrs. Purdy was brought to the District Jail on a stretcher. Her condition made it impossible for her to be arraigned. Through the winter she was frequently visited by her husband. As her condition became worse, it was decided to take her to Gallinger.

Thursday night an "oxygen tent" was used in an attempt to keep the aged woman alive.

Tyler Predicts Liquor Prices Will Be Low

Norfolk, Va., March 16 (Spl.).—Maj. S. Heth Tyler, selected by Gov. Peery today to head the liquor control board in Virginia, says legalized whisky will be sold below prices now charged by bootleggers.

"We know we will be able to sell a better grade of whisky than bootleggers offer for $2 and $3 a quart, at not more than $1.50 a quart," he said.

"Of course there will be higher priced whiskies, too, but we feel certain the grade State dispensaries can offer at $1.50 will be better than the average bootleg product."

Maj. Tyler says he is ready to speed the legal sale of whisky as much as possible.

Maj. Tyler, a descendant of President John Tyler, has served as State senator from Norfolk and is a former mayor of Norfolk.

Green Claims U. S. Building Strike Peace

Says 200 Workers Will Resume Labor-I. C. C. Jobs Monday.

Union Leader Declares Walk-Out Will Go On, However.

"The men will return to work Monday," Green told The Post, saying he will announce his decision today on the jurisdictional dispute over laying of tile floors, which involves cement finishers, carpenters and tile-setters.

The A. F. of L. president, who was chosen as arbitrator two weeks ago, heard the three trades' arguments Thursday night.

Locher Against Return.

Even though Green settles the controversy which precipitated the walkout February 14, the strikers will not go back to work Monday nor until they are ordered to do so by the council, Locher said. There are a few more complaints to be disposed of first by the executive board, the secretary declared, and no meeting has been scheduled yet. The strike was called by the council.

Informed of Locher's stand, Green reminded that only the floor dispute was laid before him for arbitration and said he could not comment on whatever additional grievances the council might have.

The council is the local unit of the Building Trades Department of the American Federation of Labor. Neither the carpenters nor bricklayers unions are members of the council.

Split Agreed Upon.

Green was prepared to arbitrate the dispute, which originated between cement finishers and carpenters, two weeks ago yesterday when the tile setters suddenly put in a claim and caused a postponement. Since then, the carpenters and tile setters have agreed to put up a solid front against the cement finishers and, if the job is awarded to them, wholly or in part, split it on a 50-50 basis.

The council is provoked because carpenters have continued with the floor work while cement finishers, iron workers, painters and other member trades have been on strike. Hence, even if the disputed work is awarded to the cement finishers by Green, they may return to find it has been completed in their absence.

About 250 workmen, some of them members of unions affiliated with the building trades council, have remained at work throughout, according to a spokesman for James Stewart & Co., contractors.

Harris May Ruin Cronin's Outfield Plans by Landing Regular Job

Dapper David Tries Hard For Berth

Regular Infield Begins Practice Today; Camp Takes New Life.

BILOXI, Miss., March 16 (Spl.).—Dave Harris, the Greensboro sheriff who has been arresting the attention of the American League for the last 5 years with his pinch-hitting prowess, today started a one-man revolution to foil the plans of Manager Joe Cronin of the Nats.

Dapper David, who has been nothing but a bridesmaid in the Washington outfielding ceremonies since the Nats brought him on from Chicago in 1930, again is evincing a hope that springs eternal is consecrating his efforts toward a regular job this season.

Cronin's 1934 plans do not include Harris in a regular outfield role in deference to the presence of Johnny Stone, the outfielder who came to the Nats from Detroit in the Goslin deal, but the 1934 plans of Dave Harris reveal no place for Stone in the outfield, unless, perchance, the young man is successful in ousting Heinie Manush or Fred Schulte from a job.

Smacks Long Balls.

Today, Harris served notice of his insurrection when he smacked two successive balls up against the far-flung left field fence of the Biloxi ball park on the first bounce to set the tongues of the bleacherites wagging at such a prodigious display of clouting in his first time at bat. The Biloxi ball yard, it might be mentioned, is the daddy of all ball yards, with the fences standing across the county line.

Stone, who had worked out in the morning with the regulars, was not a witness to Dave's lusty smacking of the ball, but Harris was putting on a show for the benefit of Freddie Sington and Gus Dugas, the pair of interlopers from Albany who are looking for Dave's utility job.

Inwardly, Dave is chafing at his assignment to the afternoon squad with the regulars. But you can't stump him.

A Fine Understudy.

Dave has confided to me that Stone would make a fine understudy for him in right field during the regular season.

But both Harris and Stone are to receive some competition for the right field job from an unexpected source if first impressions of young Gus Dugas are not misleading. Not as big as either Harris or Stone, but built compactly along the lines of Johnny Mostil, Dugas was cutting into the ball with great vigor this afternoon and overshadowed the hitting of big Freddy Sington who has been the more widely hailed of the rookies.

Dugas has no license to remain out of the big leagues, according to Cronin's informants and Scout Joe Engel, who saw the workout today, but there is no reason to believe that Stone's job is in the least jeopardized. The good-looking former Tiger can hit, run and field in the most approved style and Cronin thought well enough of him to part with Goslin in an even swap.

Cronin is doing double duty as a result of splitting the big squad into morning and afternoon shifts, appearing in practice with the regulars in the morning and supervising the work of the rookies in mufti in the afternoon when he is better able to get a line on their talents.

Confidence Returns.

The presence of such stalwarts as Manush, Schulte, Kuhel and Myer during the past two days has proven a figurative shot in the arm to the squad in general. They are the boys who, with Cronin, represent the punch of the ball club and the old confidence has returned to the pitchers in the knowledge that the heavy duty boys are within call.

Manush, Myer and Schulte are conceding the spring hitting honors to the rookies or whoever wants 'em. These veterans of the baseball wars are not eager to stand up there and try too seriously for base hits against rookie pitchers who couldn't find the plate with a compass. Gradually, when the pitching improves, you will hear from the better hitters.

With the arrival of Bluege, the regular infield will take the field tomorrow and fling the ball around a bit, with Travis sharing the third base job with the veterans. After Ossie begins to unlimber himself, Travis will have the opportunity to watch third base being played as it should be played.

Hits, Runs and Errors.

Buddy Myer says a base runner takes a great chance of being picked off every time he intends to steal second...and Whitehill says that third is the easiest base to steal... Biloxi has declared a legal half holiday for the Nats' first game with the Indians here March 22...Unless it rains tomorrow, Cronin has ordered no practice for Sunday... Scout Joe Engel continued to ogle the rookies from the side lines this afternoon...With his Chattanooga Club in mind...He is about to grab Phillips and Radonovich...but Catcher Elmer Klumpp is putting Chattanooga behind him forever by the way he is smacking the ball and conducting himself behind the bat...If Cliff Bolton relents and signs his contract, he will rue the day that Klumpp came into his life.

Hialeah Park Closes Winter Racing Season With Running of Florida Derby Today

The Greentree Stable's Soon Over, over night second choice. This 3-year-old worked nine furlongs in 1:52 2-5 in final preparation for the $10,000 race.

A camera-eye view of a field running over the turf course, affording a glimpse at the beautiful lake in the infield. There are no steeplechase races at Hialeah and the turf contests have served to break the monotony of the regular flat competition.

Agrarian, with Sonny Workman, Washington jockey, up, has been installed the rich favorite for the mile and an eighth test. The colt is owned by Mrs. F. J. Heller.

Hialeah Park Horsemen Strike

Act After Suspension of Trainer; Want Dope Rule Changed.

MIAMI, Fla., March 16 (U.P.).—The crusade of the Florida Racing Commission, in its drive to eliminate the "stimulation" of race horses, hit a serious snag today and threatened to become a serious breach between horsemen and the Florida Racing Commission.

Horsemen struck early in the day, refusing to enter their horses in the four of the five races which support tomorrow's Florida Derby, $10,000 event, and its companion feature, the Juvenile Championship Stake.

Neither of the feature races was affected by the strike called early in the day by L. Jones, a field representative of the Thoroughbred Owners Association.

Seek Rule Revision.

Horsemen stood their ground all through the day, demanding a revision of the Florida rule relative to holding a trainer responsible for the condition of his horse.

The strike has been slowly brewing. The lid blew off when word reached the race track that C. H. "Tobe" Trotter, trainer of the Jersey Stable, had been suspended for the balance of the Florida racing season because caffein was discovered on the horse Olamay. This occurred after Trotter had requested the commission to take a saliva test of the animal following a dismal race early in the week.

The commission at this meeting ruled off the Florida turf G. W. Coburn, trainer of the horse Garlic, which won a race here last week and was disqualified. It was discovered that Garlic had been stimulated, the commission reported.

Reported by Trainer.

J. B. Patridge, trainer of the horse Ondott, reported to the stewards that he believed the horse had been tampered with. Examination disclosed that caffeine had been administered. Patridge wats exonerated for reporting this matter to the commission.

When horsemen were appraised of the commission's ruling on Trotter, they organized their strike. Most agreed to let the stake races go as scheduled, but refused to enter their horses in the other events.

Conferences between the horsemen and the Florida commission and the trainers and Chairman Joseph E. Widener of the Miami Jockey Club did not heal the breach. It was finatlly atnnounced that the closing time for the entries would be at 7:30 a. m. The stewards later put the closing time back to 8 p. m.

Outsiders Blamed.

The situation, as seen by nonpartisan observers, resolves around the trainers' demand for immunity from blame if stimulants are found to have been used on their horses. The trainers feel that outsiders have been known to tamper with horses. They resent the culpability being placedplaced at their door. They hold hat since the State's narcotic squad employs a crew of watchers to look after every entrant in a race, that the State's mben should be held responsible for the horse. The State refuses to accede to this demand of the trainers.

The Hialeah Park meeting ends tomorrow with the running of the Florida Derby. Two weeks' racing is scheduled for Tropical Park, at Coral Gables, to begin on Monday. The horsemen insist their fight is against the Miami Jockey Club. However, if the matter is not settled between the two warring factions, there is scant likelihood of Tropical Park meeting opening.

Illinois Body Backs 158 Days of Racing

Chicago, March 16 (U.P.).—Horse racing will be conducted at the six Chicago tracks from May 1 to October 31, a total of 158 days, under a schedule approved by the new Illinois racing commission.

Aurora will open the season on May 1 and close on May 23. Washington Park will operate from May 24 to June 23; Arlington Park, June 25 to July 28; Hawthorne, July 30 to September 1; Lincoln Fields, September 3 to October 6, and Sportsman's Park, October 8 to October 31.

Gallant Sir Choice In Caliente Classic

Works Fast After Dismal Showing in Races.

Agua Caliente, Mexico, March 16 (AP).—Ill-tempered Gallant Sir has turfmen of Tia Juana Valley in a quandary today over the Agua Caliente Handicap with its $25,000 added purse, to be run here Sunday.

The sulking son of Sir Galahad III has shown that he definitely is the class of the small field if he is willing to go as he did a year ago to win the classic in the record time of 2 minutes 23-5 seconds.

After two dismal performances here this spring in which he did everything but run the wrong direction, Gallant Sir went the distance yesterday in 2 minutes 54-5 seconds in a training run, which promptly caused a shortening of the already prohibitive odds in favor of the Norman Church entry.

Yet many of the smart turfmen have switched to Pari-Mutuel, Curtis King's 6-year-old horse, which now stands second out to the Gallant Sir-Riskulus entry in the future books, with Broadwalker, George Marshall's 5-year-old mare, third.

Wood Assumes Charleston Golf Lead

Shoots Subpar 70 for 139 Total; Three Are Tied, Stroke Behind.

CHARLESTON, S. C., March 16 (AP).—Craig Wood, from Deal, N. J., shot a fine subpar 70 today to add to his opening-round 69 for a two-round total of 139 and a one-stroke lead over the field in the Charleston open golf tournament.

The Jersey star, a long hitter who was the leading money winner of the 1933 season, but has been unable to hit his stride consistently this year, was just in front of a trio of pros, Victor Ghezzi, of Rumson, N. J.; Henry Picard, of Charleston, and Paul Runyan, of White Plains, N. Y.

Low Scores Cut Down.

The sea winds that were moderately quiet yesterday swept this Wappoo course on historic James Island for a while today and served to cut down the low scores that featured the first round.

Ghezzi and Runyan constructed the best rounds today, both finishing with 68s; Picard, the Wappoo course pro, fired another 70 to equal his first-round performance.

Two blows behind the leader were Abe Espinosa, Chicago pro, and Mortie Dutra, the big Spaniard from Detroit. Espinosa put a 70 today with his previous 71, while Dutra added a 71 to his earlier 70.

Five Tie with 142s.

Five pros were tied with 142s. These included Melvin Hemphill, Columbia, S. C.; Frank Walsh, Chicago; Ky Laffoon, Denver; Horton Smith, New York, and Jack Toomer, Hendersonville, N. C.

Harry Cooper, Chicago pro, one of the opening round stars, with a 69, slipped to a 75 today and stood at 144, along with Herman Barron, Portchester, N. Y.

Still within striking distance of the leader, and grouped at 145, were Al Espinosa, Arkon, Ohio; George Chryst, Rochester, N. Y.; Joe Turnesa, Elsmford, N. Y., and Bill Kaiser, Louisville.

Francis Ford, Charleston, was in front of the amateurs with 74—72—146. Alan Smith, Asheville, who shot a fine 70 for a first day lead, soared to an 84 today.

Mackey, Grid Captain At Emory and Henry

Emory, Va., March 16 (AP).—The election of Bus Mackey, Emory and Henry guard, to captain the Wasp football team next fall, was announced here today.

Mackey, one of the outstanding men in a stout Emory and Henry forewall, was one of the big reasons for the sensational victory march of the Wasps last fall that carried into the final game of the season.

A Prophet With Honor

By Paul Gallico.

NEW YORK, March 16 (Spl.).—One fine thing about this column and which makes it so valuable to its readers throughout the country is the accuracy of the information and predictions contained therein. Some months ago I wrote with great ferocity that Primo Carnera was afraid of Max Baer and would never sign to fight him, that his manager, Signor Luigi Soresi, was marooned in Italy and afraid to return to the United States because of the gentlemen who were handling Da Preem. I wrote that Carnera would never return to the United States, preferring to fight in Europe where the boys couldn't get at him or his money. I wrote that when he fought Paulino Uzcudun in Rome for Mussolini, Primo got nothing but a medal for his pains. A little later, though I am not quite clear about this, I think I might have turned around on a rainy day and written that it was really Max Baer who was afraid of Carnera and not the other way around. Anyway, I was convinced that the two never could be signed for a prize fight under the auspices of Madison Square Garden, because I had a lot of secret and inside information why this could not take place.

I am merely refreshing your memory so that you may see what you are getting for your money, and tell your friends. My beloved clients, it pains me to have to confess at this time that no matter how attractively it was dished up, it was still boloney. For lo and also behold, the Baer-Carnera match is made for June 14 in the Madison Square Garden Bowl. They will fight 15 rounds for the heavyweight championship and it seems that nobody is really afraid of anybody, the articles have been signed, and old Mr. G., the peerless sports prophet, has again been made a bum of.

To this I need only add that I was informed by Signor Soresi during a gabfest in my cabin on the way down to Miami for the Loughran fight that Primo did not box Paulino for any medal, but plenty of lira, all of which he collected. This ends our true confessions for today, and I cite this merely as a lesson to you not to believe everything you see in the papers, but particularly not what you see here. I am occasionally entertaining, but usually wrong. I am now happy to inform you that I am firmly convinced that on the night of June 14, or whenever they meet in accordance with the articles just signed, Max Baer will knock out Primo Carnera and that he will do it inside of ten rounds. I know that you will be happy to hear that for the next few months I expect to fill many a column with misinformation telling you why I think so and why it is inevitable.

At least you must give me credit that if I am wrong I am good and wrong. I go way, way out on the end of the limb. After all, now that we are friends and understand one another, what have we to lose? I give you no ifs, ands or buts, not even a however, or an on-the-other-hand. I do not care whether Max has a chorus girl on each knee between rounds, he still knocks him out. I will let him train on the stage of the Casino de Paree, sleep at Polly Adler's, and he still knocks him out. He can smoke ten big black cigars a day, dance the Carioca until 6 a. m. every morning and do his road work in roundhouses, and the first time he catches the champion flush on the jaw with a right, its the beginning of the end.

When it is over and I have been wrong again, I will give you no lament that fast living has made Baer nothing but a hollow shell. I will hand you no knockout-drops-in-the-drinking water yarn, or scream that Baer was gypped by the judges. If Baer doesn't knock out Carnera I am a lousy prophet. I am even if he does. At 185 pounds, Loughran, the cream-puff puncher, hit Primo flush on the jaw and buckled his knees. At 205 pounds, Baer, who hits like a trip-hammer, will nail the Beeg Wan and that will be that. Don't ask me how I know, I'm clairvoyant.

Well, I'm delighted that the match is made. It is the first break the dear public has had from prize fighters in many a year. From the moment that Baer knocked Max Schmeling kicking and Carnera stopped Jack Sharkey with one of those terrific uppercuts that didn't even ruddy Loughran's complexion, there has been a real demand for these two men to meet and fight it out. Up to those two matches, there had been so many sour heavyweight endings, fouls and poor decisions and bad fights that interest in the class has practically evaporated.

But the two knockouts woke the boys up again. The customers began to picture what would happen when these two men climbed through the ropes with one another and no favors asked. Carnera's weight and speed against Baer's punch. There, gentlemen, is something to sell, the makings of another Dempsey-Firpo match. It's about time for that one to come around again in the cycle. If those two fellows can get through 15 rounds without denting one another or hitting the deck then I am a poor prophet. But we have been all over the prophet stuff before. Mum-m-m.

How I look forward to being good and wrong again. Picking Columbia to beat Stanford has done me immeasurable harm with my public. Thank heaven, I haven't been right since.

Well, leave you to ponder over the above. In future, please do not go around quoting me because you will just get yourself into trouble. It isn't even safe to take my selections and bet the other way because ever so often when I should be wrong, I'm right. Frankly, the best way to handle this stuff is to read the first paragraph to see whether I am abusing any one you know. If not just throw it away. It's probably nothing but a lot of lies any way.

Don Miller, of Wasps, Leaves for Texas League

Emory, Va., March 16 (AP).—Don Miller, Emory and Henry College's sensational shortstop, has signed a contract with the Detroit Tigers and was headed South today to report to the Beaumont Club of the Texas League.

His departure deprives the Wasps of their captain-elect and one of the flashiest college players in the Old Dominion. He had played two seasons with the Emory and Henry nine.

Last summer, Billy Doyle, Detroit scout, saw Miller perform in a game at Marion. Impressed, he offered the youngster a contract, and Miller signed.

Miller is from Abingdon, Va.

Johnson Honored, Walter D. Winner

New Orleans, March 16 (AP).—Walter D, five-year old veteran of racing wars, won his first race of the year today when he accounted for the Walter Johnson Claiming Handicap, named in honor of the manager of the Cleveland Baseball Club, at the Fair Grounds.

Stepping away from the barrier in front, the son of Dress Parade marched home a neck in front of Amazing, an offspring of the famous In Memoriam. La Salle was third.

Walter D ran the furlongs in the surprisingly fast time of 1:11 2-5 and paid $4.20 straight in the mutuels.

Oxford Meets Cambridge On Thames

Is Rated as Underdog for 86th Event Between Crews Today.

LONDON, March 16 (AP).—Unless their shell spring a leak or some other calamity overtakes them, Cambridge's powerful crew will enter its eighty-sixth rowing contests with Oxford on the Thames tomorrow favored to sweep to its eleventh straight victory.

A large crowd lined the banks of the twisting stream today for the final workouts and gained the impression that the Light Blues packed too much rhythm, speed and experience for their old rivals.

Cambridge, which has hung up 44 victories as against Oxford's 40 since the inaugural race in 1829, has been rowing as a unit since the start of training last fall. In contrast, Oxford has had more than its share of troubles, changing shells twice and losing three regulars through illness or injury.

Good Time Recorded.

Several full course trials saw Cambridge averaging around a half minute better time for the 4-mile-and-180-yard grind and the Cantaus are favored to better their 1933 winning margin of 2¼ lengths.

Cambridge has been clocked for the full course in 19:31 while Oxford, on an ebb tide, seemed "all out" after rowing the distance in 19:43. The Light Blues already have shattered all records for successive triumphs, the victory last year surpassing the nine straight hung up by the Dark Blues on two different occasions.

Despite the apparent Cambridge superiority, the prospects are that half of London will be jammed along the banks between Putney and Mortlake when the starting gun booms shortly after 2 p. m. (9 a. m. E. S. T.)

It's still "the boat race."

High School Highlights.

THEY laid Bob Michelet to rest yesterday on a quiet hillside in Cedar Hill Cemetery. The bright, crisp afternoon was reminiscent of other days here in Washington when the same boy trotted out on the gridiron in a Central High football uniform to gain the All-High honors of the Capital, which predestined the All-American honors of the Nation he was later to attain.

The services were brief and simple. Dr. Boyd Edwards, headmaster at Mercersburg, where the youth studied after leaving Central, conducted them jointly with Chaplain Chamberlain of Dartmouth, where Michelet died. A large and representative group of his college classmates attended. A number of Washington athletic heads were present.

Athletes and nonathletes were the pallbearers, for Bob Michelet, a Phi Beta Kappa man and Rhodes scholar, was as successful in the field of study as he was in the field of sport.

From every walk of life, from every section of the country, came the wealth of floral tributes which were placed upon the grave. Today they form a silent testament that Washington has lost not only one of its finest contributions to the world of athletics and of learning, but also one of whom all men held universal respect.

In the out of doors of Washington young Bob Michelet started his rise to the heights of sport. Under the open sky of Washington he sleeps.

Lott, Stoefen In Finals of Doubles

Shields and Wood Are Beaten in 2-Hour Indoor Battle.

NEW YORK, March 16 (AP).—George M. Lott, jr., of Chicago, and Lester R. Stoefen, of Los Angeles, advanced to the final round of the United States indoor doubles championship today by defeating Frank X. Shields and Sidney B. Wood, jr., New York, 7—9, 6—3, 7—9, 7—5, 6—4, in a 2-hour third round match on the Seventh Regiment Armory board courts.

Their opponents in the final to be played tomorrow will be Berkeley Bell and Frank J. Bowden, of New York, who won by default owing to the sudden death of the father of Dr. Lawrence Kurzrok, who with Jack Pittman, jr., was scheduled today to play Bell and Bowden.

Stoefen and Lott, who hold the National grass court doubles title, scored over their opponents on their volleying and blistering service.

Lott Loses on Service.

The Chicago Davis Cup veteran contributed to his team's loss of the first set by losing his service in the third and fifteenth games. Wood and Shields also shattered Lott's delivery in the deciding sixteenth game of the third set. The match resolved itself into a battle of services, with Wood and Stoefen sharing the honors until the fourth set, when the Los Angeles-Chicago pair broke Wood's delivery in the eleventh game after the score had at deuce seven times and Wood dangled at deuce seven times and Wood double faulted.

In the final set, after leading 40—15 in the seventh game, Lott and Stoefen evened up the count and took the next 2 points.

Lott, who by this time had returned to form, won his service, putting his side in the lead in games, 5—3.

Shields won the ninth game at love and Stoefen, in the final canto, slammed the ball across the cord to clinch the match.

Not only will Stoefen compete in the doubles final tomorrow, but he also will engage Gregory S. Mangin, the defending champion, in three out of five sets for the singles title.

Mangin has been the champion for two years and victory tomorrow will give him permanent possession of the trophy.

Pond Drives Gridmen As Yale Drills Start

New Haven, Conn., March 16 (AP).—Raymond W. (Ducky) Pond, new head coach of Yale football, put 75 candidates for the 1934 team through the hardest early practice Yale has seen in years, as the first spring workout got under way in the Yale armory.

The practice consisted of blocking, spinning the ball and running with the ball under the experienced eyes of Pond and his assistants, Denny Myers, line coach, and Earle (Greasy) Neale, backfield coach, both of West Virginia and Stewart Scott, former Yale end, and Century Milstead, former all-American tackle, of Yale.

Dartmouth Nine Plans Southern Training Trip

Hanover, N. H., March 16 (AP).—Although Dartmouth's track budget has been drastically cut by the athletic council's retrenchment program, Coach Harry Hillman's promising team will enjoy a southern training trip to Virginia and North Carolina during the Easter vacation.

Dual meets have been booked with William & Mary at Williamsburg, Va., on March 31; with the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, N. C., on April 3, and with the University of Virginia at Charlottesville, Va., on April 6.

Smith Named Captain Of Wash.-Lee Quintet

Lexington, Va., March 16 (AP).—Charles Smith, of Jacksonville, Fla., was today elected captain of the Southern Conference championship Washington and Lee basket ball team for 1935. Smith was elected all-conference tournament center. He also plays at end on the Generals' football team.

This Morning

With Shirley L. Povich.

BILOXI, Miss., March 16—The official observer for the Washington Club, who always speaks unofficially but is conceded to know whereof he speaks, none other than Joe Engel, the Nats' scout, makes a few pertinent remarks anent the Washington pitching staff, particularly a pair of recruits he sent to the team from its Chattanooga farm.

Informed that five first-flight rookies were battling for the three open berths on the Washington pitching staff, Engel fearlessly ventured the opinion that Alec McColl, Ray Prim and Bobby Burke would be retained. Which leaves us to account for the residue: Ed Chapman and Ed Linke.

Linke is one year away from the big leagues, declares Engel, and Chapman has failed signally to pustify the promise he showed in the International League last year, which is the way the lone scout disposed of those two young men.

Praise for McColl.

Engel waxes downright enthusiastic at the mention of McColl: "That old boy should have been in the big leagues 15 years ago," says Joe. "He's one of the tragic cases of a good pitcher wasting himself in the minors," added Joe, oblivious to such damaging remarks against his own profession of scouting.

"Give Alec four or five days' rest and he can pitch for anybody's ball team," Engel went on. "He doesn't have that fast ball any more, but he can pitch everything else that's in the book. Why, he can throw the best screwball in the American League if he's had enough rest. He can find a man's batting weakness simply by looking at the way he holds his bat.

"And this Linke will bounce right back to the big leagues if he doesn't make the grade this year. He was still shy on control with us last season, and if he ever learns to put the ball where he wants it, they can't keep him off the Washington Club. He's got speed to burn and there's a fifth infielder out there when he's pitching."

Hurlers Learn Late.

"The trouble with most pitchers is that they never really learn to pitch until they start slipping. That's a fact. When the old fast ball starts to slow up on 'em they begin to hunt around for stuff to fool the batter with. I remember Al Crowder when he never thought of throwing a curve. And now he has a great hook on the ball.

"Look at Fred Marberry. He didn't have to worry about throwing hooks with the dynamite he had on the ball. He could burn 'em right down the middle and get away with it. And then he started to slow up and to think about throwing some hooks in there. And what happened? Last year, he pitched the best ball in his life for the Tigers.

"I say those pitchers don't think about learning to pitch until their stuff begins to leave 'em. Herb Pennock was an exception, and from what I hear of Griff when he was a pitcher, he had to be smart because he didn't have anything on the ball in the first place."

Large Crowd Sees Patchpocket Win Easily by Length and a Half at Hialeah

Ogle Gelding Wins Second Straight

Returns $6.20 Mutuel; Clonard Is Second; Precept Third.

Teeter Totter Is Victor; North Mill Triumphs; Xerseise Scores.

HIALEAH PARK, March 16 (AP). Despite threatening weather and a slow track caused by heavy early morning rain, one of the largest weekday crowds of the meeting viewed the races here this afternoon. The Visiting Governors Purse, 7-furlong feature, resulted in G. W. Ogle's Patchpocket racing to his second straight victory on an off track. The gelding easily defeated DeWitt Page's Clonard by a length and a half, while C. H. Thieriot's Precept took the show, another 5 lengths away. Patchpocket, paying $6.20, negotiated the distance in 1:25 3-5.

Gov. Eugene Talmadge of Georgia and Gov. Booker Ehringhaus of North Carolina with their wives and daughters and staffs, after whom the headline attraction was named, viewed the events as guests of the Miami Jockey Club.

J. E. Widener's Chance Line, a colt of high early foot, cut out the running for the better part of a half-mile, closely attended by Patchpocket. The latter and Clonard ran over Chance Line approaching the stretch turn and Tipton swung Patchpocket into a safe lead after straightening out for home. Coucci whipped Clonard vigorously, but while as easy second, he was unable to cope with the winner. Precept had no trouble distancing the laboring Chance Line for the show.

Screen Is Victorious.

The sun came out just after the first race, which saw Screen lead seven other sprinters virtually the entire 6 furlongs to score easily by two lengths. Luck In beat In High, the choice, by the same distance for place honors. Jimmy Hunter had Screen off well and, sending the gelding to the front, sat still to the judges without serious opposition. Luck In disposed of In High in the final furlong. The winner returned $9.80.

Seventeen maiden 2-year-olds staged a wild scramble down the 3 furlongs nursery course in the second contest. Johnny Gilbert brought Teeter Totter, a first time starter, first home by three lengths at the lucrative odds of $39.80 for $2. Migrate earned the place by a length from Bank Holiday.

Leon Garrett, the apprentice lad who recently rode his first mount to victory, accepted his second mount in the third event and again rode like a cool-headed veteran to score by a neck astride Bright Bubble. Field Goal was second, two lengths before Fred Almy. Bright Bubble won easily despite his narrow winning margin and returned $7.40.

North Mill Scores.

One of the most exciting finishes of the season materialized in the fourth event when North Mill, Golden Fate and Miney Myerson reached the judges noses apart as named, with Minton a close fourth. Earl Porter had a rough trip astride the winner, meeting with interference all through the back stretch. He finally got clear, taking to the outside on the final bend. Miney Myerson and Golden Fate showed the way until North Mill collared them in the closing strides to pay $8.90.

Character, thriving on the soft going, ran one of his good races to register a hollow four lengths triumph in the sixth number, in which only four horses competed over the mile distance. Bobby Jones broke the gelding in front and his mount maintained a wide lead throughout to return $9.10. Sabula, unable to keep up in the early stages, moved up entering the stretch, but tired and just lasted to head Red Roamer for the place.

Xerseise, $7.10, won the finale by a length from Flying Gypsy, with Rego a close third.

Strange as It Seems —By John Hix

Thomas Paine, famous political and philosophical writer, was caught in the late eighteenth century troubles of France and, because among other things, he opposed the execution of Louis XVI, he was arrested and held in Luxembourg Prison. The reign of terror of the revolution brought about scores of executions of political prisoners in the prison—and one night Paine was marked for death.

The practice was, when a man was condemned to die, a chalk mark would be placed on his cell door. Then, when soldiers came to take the condemned prisoners to the guillotine they could tell who was to be taken. Paine's cell door was thus marked for his execution, but strange as it seems, the official who marked it drew his mark on the door as it stood wide open flat against the wall.

When the door was closed again, the chalk mark was on the inside, and Paine was saved. Many people, including American officials, thought him to be dead. Strange as it seems, Paine himself did not know of his miraculous escape until some time later—for when his cell was marked for death he was delirious with fever.

Paine, who was an American citizen of English birth, was rescued from prison by James Monroe, then American Minister to France. Later he was restored to his seat in the French Convention, which office he held until—the convention adjourned. He returned to America in 1802.

Hialeah Race Track, March 16.

Dear Al:

The horsemen (meaning that army of hopeful owners of claimers) went on the warpath here today. They have lined up solidly in back of George Coburn, owner of Garlic. Track officials say that traces of a stimulant were found in Garlic's saliva and today the Florida Commission ruled Coburn off. It was another of the rulings that hold owners responsible for horses. So complete was the "strike" of the horsemen that track officials were unable to obtain entires for four races, and last night gave up the attempt until tomorrow morning. Of course, the Florida Derby and the Juvenile Handicap are filled. Track officials declared last night that they would have a full program if they had to run two-horse fields, drawn from the big stables, in four races. This course closes with tomorrow's program, but as most of the cheaper stables are staying in the State for the Tropical Park session, the horsemen want a showdown. BILL.

Stephen Citizens Stage Shoot at East Riverdale

The second turkey shoot of the Stephen Citizens Association will be held this afternoon at 12:30 o'clock on Edmonston road in East Riverdale. Requests of many hunters who were kept away from the first shoot by the bad weather of last week led to scheduling of another competition.

Shotguns of not more than 12 gauge will be used and will be supplied to those not bringing firearms. Targets will be stationary at about 35 yards.

There will be prizes and a special competition for fat men. Separate shooting for women will be held. Leo Haber is chairman of the program. Buses leave Fifteenth and H streets northeast, stopping at the field. Lunches will be sold and there will be free parking space.

Stocks Capture Firmer Footing In Slight Rise

New York, March 16 (AP).—Stocks found firmer footing today and improved quietly after some further offerings had been absorbed around opening time.

The better tone was attributed to several factors, among them a recovery in silver futures, optimistic comment on retail and wholsale trade, a new 1934 high for freight-car loadings and hopes that the automobile labor controversy was nearing a settlement. U. S. Government loans were firm, but corporation bonds looked spotty and their average was down slightly.

The stock composite of 90 issues closed two-tenths of a point higher on a turnover of 1,177,180 shares.

Silver Market Rallies.

The silver market was rather heavy during the morning, but it rallied on news that two recently introduced silver bills would come before the House Monday for a record vote.

U. S. Smelting closed 3 points to the good; Cerro de Pasco, Dome and McIntyre Porcupine gained less extensively. Metals began to firm around noon and their performance, following yesterday's break, was helpful to other groups, although none except the mining issues and a few specialties got very far.

Douglas Aircraft, Schenley Distillers, McKesson & Robbins, Montgomery Ward, American Shipbuilding, Southern Railway, Chrysler and National Biscuit advanced fractions to a couple of points. Eastman Kodak and Allied Chemical, up one each, responded to favorable earnings statements. Aviations were active and firm, but rails traded quietly.

Chain Stores Higher.

American Telephone took an early dip, then got back most of its loss. Chain store shares tended higher. Issues of Alleghany Corporation drooped in response to the announcement of a capital readjustment plan involving new preferred stock.

Revenue freight loadings last week totaled 612,402 cars, the best traffic since last October.

The increase over the preceding week, 8,265 cars, was contraseasonal and undoubtedly reflected an accelerated movement of goods following the restrictions placed on railroads by a fortnight of bad weather. A decline usually occurs during the week in question. The gain over 1933 amounted to 40 per cent, but conditions then pertaining are to be taken into account in considering the comparison.

Spring Trade Outlook.

Dun & Bradstreet commented cheerfully on the spring trade movement, saying "the avalanche of new business received from territories throughout the Middle West, Atlantic and South Atlantic States "is significant testimony that the various Federal programs in those sections have established a constant flow of funds to consumers."

Productive and distributive totals for March, the agency thought, may exceed figures for the past three years.

Money rates were unchanged. There is some seasonal activity in commercial paper, but the last fluctuation in rates, occuring early this month, was a small decline.

Robey's Review

Finance Economics Business

Morgenthau's Statement on Silver Reflects Both Courage and Common Sense; Was Inevitable That It Would Meet Immediate Opposition.

By Ralph West Robey.

It was not to be expected that the silver interests would let Secretary Morgenthau's statement go unchallenged. To do so would be virtually ruinous to the campaign they have been waging. Their case rests upon keeping a substantial segment of the public convinced that "something more must be done for silver" or the whole recovery movement will collapse. From their point of view, accordingly, it was imperative for Mr. Morgenthau's opinion—that nothing more need be done because recovery is going along well as it is—be answered immediately.

The answer has come from Speaker Rainey. He made his plan public at a press conference after consulting with the silver bloc. It is to bring the two silver bills reported favorably by the Coinage Committee to a vote Monday under a suspension of the rules, which requires a two-thirds majority for passage. One of these measures, the Dies bill, involves our swapping agricultural products abroad for silver at an arbitrary price. The other, the Fiesinger bill, authorizes the purchase of 1,500,000,000 ounces of silver against which to issue paper money. Both measures admittedly are for the purpose of increasing the price of silver.

Administration Has Taken Two Steps to Help Silver.

So far, this Administration has done only two things to help silver. The first of these was to accept payments on the inter-allied debts last December in this metal at a price of 50 cents an ounce. The only effect of this, aside from saving foreign debtors some money, was to take a little silver off the market. It was a complete dud from the point of view of raising the general market price except, perhaps, for a slight psychological effect as a result of its indicating the growing influence of the silver group.

The second step to help silver was more successful. It consisted of having the Treasury buy all domestically mined silver at a price of 64½ cents an ounce. The market price at the time was about 42 cents, so that the effect of this order by the President was to give our silver producers a subsidy of about 50 per cent.

In spite of this move, however, the general market price of silver remained about the same. It has gone up since, reaching 46¾ cents the middle of last month, but the rise can not be credited to the order, except again, in so far as it indicated a willingness to "do something for silver."

Silver Group Maintain Still More Is Needed.

The silver interests, accordingly, still are unsatisfied. They maintain that what has been done has failed because it was not sufficient—that what we need is a policy that will pour silver into our monetary system in such volume prices will have to rise—that if we do not return to a 16 to 1 ratio, which several of them want, we at least have the Government buy enough of the metal to raise its price to a minimum of $1.29 an ounce and preferably to above $2.

Secretary Morgenthau, on the other hand, can see no need for such action. In fact he reflected a rather genuine skepticism that "doing something for silver" would be of any appreciable benefit in helping us along the road to recovery.

In taking this attitude the Secretary shows both courage and good sense. He might have been even stronger. "Doing something for silver" not only would not help us economically but would be a handicap in that it further would waste public funds and undermine the credit of the Government. Silver agitation in this country, while involving many people who are sincere in their belief that bimetallism would be an aid, is, and has been for a generation, fundamentally nothing more than a racket.

Bond Market Takes Rest as Sales Slacken

Federal Loans, Corporate Issues Firm; Transfers, Total $14,258,000.

New York, March 16 (AP). — The bond market took a little rest today and only U. S. Government securities and scattering of corporation issues displayed any real firmness.

The hesitancy was attributed not only to the fact that the list had been advancing steadily for more than a week, but to renewed nervousness over the labor situation and the probable effects of strikes on earnings.

Also some traders showed a disposition to take profits of the theory that many bonds are now quoted at their highest levels for the past two years or more.

Moderate recessions in a number of the recently buoyant groups were accompanied by a dwindling of the volume.

Tranfers Total Drops

Transfers totaled some $14,258,000, par value, against $16,451,000 yesterday. The average for 60 domestic corporate loans declined two-tenths of a point.

About $1,800,000 of federal bonds changed hands at advances ranging from one thirty-second to twelve third-seconds of a point. Eight of the Treasury and Liberty 3½s moved up to new highs for the year.

The feature of the corporate division was the heavy turnover of Alleghany Corporation 5s of 1950. Some 485 of these were traded at a net gain of 2¼ points.

They were up 3¼ at one time. The strength of this loan followed announcement that the company was borrowing cash to pay the April 1 interest. The corporation's plan to make future payments in preferred stock was rather favorably received.

List of Gainers.

Other moderate gainers included some loans of American Smelting, Chesapeake Corporation, Chicago & Northwestern, McKesson, National Dairy, National Steel, New York Central, Nickel Plate, Erie, Norfolk & Western, Philadelphia Co., Union Pacific, United Drug and Western Union. Among losers of fractions to around a point or more were issues of U. S. Rubber, St. Joseph Lead, North American Edison, Great Northern, Denver & Rio Grande, M.-K.-T., Rock Island, Central of Georgia, Consolidated Gas, Bethlehem Steel, American & Foreign Power and American Telephone.

German government obligations lost 1 to 2 and the Argentines were equally heavy. The Australians and Belgians firmed, but elsewhere in the foreign section mild irregularities prevailed.

Curb Improves After Minor Irregularities

Specialties Record Gains as Sales Decline to 249,000 Shares.

New York, March 16 (AP).—Aside from a few minor irregularities the Curb market closed steady to little improved today. Some of the metals were higher in sympathy with a rally in the group on the big board. Specialties recorded scattered advances.

Trading was generally quiet throughout the day. Initial trades were marked by an easier tone but sentiment improved into the afternoon.

General Tire and Rubber got up around 3 points and a similar rise was recorded by Consolidated Mining in less active transfers. Lake Shore Mines was 1¾ points higher and shares finishing major fractions to around a point higher included American Gas and Electric, Hiram Walker, International Petroleum Wright Hargreave, Newmont and New York Shipbuilding.

Axton Fisher lost 5 points in quiet trading. Electric Bond and Share, and Gulf Oil yielded fractionally and Sherwin Williams eased a point.

Wall Street Briefs.

New York, March 16 (AP).—New State and municipal financing scheduled for next week totals $10,262,475, compared with $17,905,995 for the current week, according to the Daily Bond Buyer. Almost half, or $4,548,000 of next week's total represents refunding financing of road bonds by 18 Iowa counties. The City of Syracuse, N. Y., will offer $2,215,000 in bonds on Monday.

Engineering contract awards this week total $18,993,000, or 64 per cent better than for the average week in March of last year, the Engineering News-Record says. The total, however, is considerably lower than for the previous week, when awards amounted to $34,023,000.

General Investment Corporation has sold its syndicate participation in notes of Westphalia United Electric Power Corporation, which were not paid at their maturity on January 1, for about $4,000,000. The purchaser is reported to be a German banking institution.

Jewel Tea Co., Inc., reports that its sales for the four weeks ended February 24 were $1,276,473, an increase of 20.2 per cent over the corresponding period of last year. The average number of store units in operation was 1,480 in 1934 and 1,426 in 1933.

The annalist index of business activity shows a rise of 3.4 points for February to a preliminary figure of 76.5. The most important factor in the increase was an advance in the automobile production index. Indices of electric power output, freight car loadings, and steel ingot production also rose substantially.

Foreign Markets.

(Associated Press.)

London—Realizing caused a general weakening of prices on the stock exchange today in a dull market. German bonds dropped 2 to 3 points, rubber shares declined in sympathy with the price of that commodity and silver shares were lower on Secretary Morgenthau's statement. Gilt-edged securities and West African mining shares were quietly maintained. The market closed uncertain.

Paris—After two days of heavy selling, the tendency on the bourse improved. Issues linked with silver declined as a result of the American opposition to the revaluation of this metal. Mexican bonds falling from 273½ to 263. The closing was irregular.

Wheat Values Renew Rise on Silver Outlook

Advance in Stocks Is Aid to Prices; Corn and Oats Higher.

Chicago, March 16 (AP).—Late gains in wheat prices today accompanied Washington announcement that despite Cabinet opposition the House of Representatives Monday next would vote on proposed silver legislation.

Optimism regarding likelihood of enactment of measures favorable to silver was supplemented by talk of probable coming reduction of taxes on grain futures dealings.

The fact also that for several successive days the wheat market had been declining led to some speculative demand because of belief an oversold condition prevailed, and that an upward swing of the pendulum was overdue.

Wheat Closes Firm.

Wheat closed firm, ¼-⅝ above yesterday's finish; corn, unchanged to ⅛ higher; oats, ⅛ to ¼ advanced, and provisions unchanged to 12 cents down.

At first, the wheat market reflected early weakness of silver and of securities. Besides, the Government report on intended seeding of domestic spring wheat was construed as bearish.

Another handicap to friends of higher prices for wheat was word that 18,000 bushels of wheat from Argentina had been shipped to the United States notwithstanding that apparently such a shipment could not be made at a profit, and was not a forerunner of more shipments.

Securities Rise Aids.

Helping later to impart comparative strength to wheat values were upturns of securities and of silver, as well as unofficial advices of adverse crop conditions in north central Kansas and south central Nebraska. A widely known expert wired that wheat crops in these sections of Kansas and Nebraska were the worst he had seen during a prolonged tour Southwest and West. Many fields, he said, must be abandoned, and much of the remainder was thin, sickly and needed rain, with lack of subsoil moisture acute.

Corn and oats were accorded support owing to prospective export demand for corn from the United States and as a result of a further rise in prices of Argentine corn.

Provisions declined, responsive to downturns of hog values.

Apple Injury Only Slight, Hough Says

Winchester, Va., March 16 (Spl.).—Walter S. Hough, entomologist of the Winchester Research Laboratory, stated in an address to the Rotary Club here today that apples in the fruit belt of the Shenandoah Valley were not injured to any extent by the abnormally cold weather during February.

Peaches, on the contrary, were so seriously damaged that this year's crop will be almost a total failure, Mr. Hough stated.

Temperature as low as 17 degrees below zero was reported to the laboratory from several places in this section. Not since 1899 has as low a temperature been recorded in this area. This February, as a whole, was the coldest February on record, Mr. Hough stated, in the section east of the Mississippi River.

It was explained that apple trees sleep deeper than peaches and that the warm weather of January disturbed the peach trees and started the buds to swelling, while the apple trees were not disturbed and, consequently, escaped injury during the extreme cold weather of February.

TODAY we present Missouri in the Parade of the States. We've found so much to show of the "Show Me" State that a number of prominent persons and interesting items about the place have been omitted. The omissions will be picked up later and adequately presented.

BAKER.

Again the Diary invites all Federal employes to send in information about their homeland and fellow workers. Next in line are Minnesota, Iowa, Alabama and Idaho.

Toast to Missouri.

Here's to her rolling prairies,
To her hills and fields of corn,
Her walnuts and strawberries,
And the able men she's borne;
Her packing plants so famous,
Which give the world good meat;
Those who are wise choose St. Louis shoes
For comfort of their feet;
A State well known throughout the world,
For the Army mules there grown.
We salute you, fair Missouri—
A State that can be shown.

MISSOURI, although termed a Western State by Easterners, and still considered on the Western frontier by those who are somewhat hazy in their early American history, was actually settled 13 years prior to the Revolution. Pierre LaClede, a Frenchman, made the first settlement at St. Louis in 1762.

Geographically it lies in the eastern half of the United States, since its western neighbor, Kansas, occupies the exact georgraphical center of the Nation.

The Spanish and French were the first explorers. After Jefferson purchased the territory from France in 1803, Missouri was the first State to be carved from this territory.

Missouri was admitted to the Union in 1821 under the famous Missouri Compromise as a slave State. The compromise provided that no other State north of Missouri's boundary of 36 degrees and 30 minutes should be admitted as a slave State.

When the War Between the States broke out, Gov. Jackson, a strong Union man, succeeded in holding Missouri in the Union, although his was a slave State and full of Southern sympathizers. With the help of the militant German immigrants Jackson prevented the Southerners from taking over one of the most powerful arsenals in the country at St. Louis.

However, Missouri, like Kentucky, is typically Southern in customs and traditions, being largely settled by Virginians and Kentuckians. Despite the fact that Missouri did not secede, 89,000 of her sons swelled the ranks of the Confederate armies. Gen. Sterling Price commanded the forces in this section.

Missouri voted with the solid South year after year until 1904, when it was carried by Theodore Roosevelt. Since then it has been an uncertain quantity politically.

For more than 20 years Missouri ranked fifth in wealth and population. The strides of California, Texas, Michigan, Ohio and Massachusetts have put Missouri into tenth place, with a population of 3,629,367 in 1930, of which 88 per cent are native born. Missouri is eighth in wealth with an estimated total of $11,311,000,000.

Kansas City, Mo., has become the largest railroad center in the country except Chicago.

Although once noted for its muddy roads, Missouri in the last five years is reported to have spent more than any other State on road building. The finest of concrete highways now traverse the State in every direction.

Missouri has been one of the earliest and strongest backers of aviation, with the flight of the Spirit of St. Louis as its special pride.

The State, with an area of 69,420 square miles, is located in the basin of two mighty rivers, the Mississippi and the Missouri. Its rich black soil makes it one of the garden spots of the world. Its products are so varied that it has long been said that it could build a wall around the borders and remain economically independent.

Recent annual surveys show the corn crop was 186,721,000 bushels; wheat, 14,926,000; oats, 8,371,000; tobacco, 7,175,000 pounds and 285,000 bales of cotton.

Fine apples, peaches, watermelons and strawberries grow in the southern part of the State.

The Missouri mule is facetiously said to have won the war. It always has been bred in large numbers and exported to all States and foreign countries. Missouri also is a leader in production of hogs and poultry.

The American Royal Stock Show in Kansas City, Mo., has long been famous throughout the country for its showing of blooded live stock.

Interesting Missourians Here.

Interesting Missourians in Government service include:

William Bradford Lanham, of Columbia, who is senior agricultural economist at Agriculture. Mr. Lanham organized in 1927 the section of estimates on cotton on hand at the end of the cotton year. He also has directed periodic estimates of cotton during the ginning period.

James L. Baity, of La Plata, is assistant to the Comptroller General. He was secretary to Senator James A. Reed for two years and then was appointed auditor for the War and Treasury Departments by President Wilson.

Charles T. Russell, of Kansas City, is deputy commissioner of Internal Revenue. Mr. Russell formerly was a field representative and member of the special advisory committee, and later became Internal Revenue Agent in charge of the St. Louis Division.

Miss Verny M. Minnick (*), of Richmond, clerk in the Audit Review Division, Internal Revenue, is a typical young business woman of Missouri and active in any project for the benefit of her State.

Miss Sally I. Miller, of Teresita, works at Zoological Division, Agriculture. Miss Miller is a tennis player and won the championship of Veterans Administration in 1930.

Harry Wallace Blair, of Joplin, a graduate of George Washington University, recently was appointed Assistant Attorney General. Mr. Blair was with the A. E. F. during the war and later practiced law in Carthage and Joplin.

Mrs. Charles A. Alger, of Kansas City, is a member of the Republican Women's Club and an active worker in the Missouri State Society. Mrs. Blair taught school before coming to Washington. She is a leader of Capital social activites.

Miss Lucille Hatcher, of Carthage, is a very capable secretary in the Office of Appointments, Internal Revenue.

Mrs. Nellie Coleman, who has been in the Internal Revenue office in St. Louis, has returned to Washington. Her home is in Charleston. Mrs. Coleman is an active member of the State Society.

Ollie Ezekiel Reed, of Fayette, is chief of the Bureau of Dairy Industry, Agriculture. Mr. Reed is a Mason and a member of the Cosmos Club.

Milo Hamilton Brinkley, of Linneus, is an attorney-examiner at Interstate Commerce Commission. He is a graduate of George Washington University and was a captain of engineers in 1918.

Mrs. Jewell Swofford is chairman of the Employes Compensation Commission.

Dr. Louise Stanley is chief of the Bureau of Home Economics, Agriculture.

The foregoing five prominent Missourians will be presented more fully at a later date in the Federal Diary, along with many others not mentioned at this time.

Among famous Missourians who have served their country well are Maj. Gen. E. H. Crowder, Rear Admiral John C. Coontz, Rear Admiral Arthur L. Willard and Gen. Amos Fries. Famous civilians include the late Champ Clark, Speaker of the House, and James A. Reed, former Senator.

Federal Employe Leader.

One who has probably done more for Federal employes than any other individual over a period of more than 16 years is Luther C. Steward, of Kansas City, president of the National Federation of Federal Employes.

Always in the forefront of every battle for improving working conditions, getting higher salaries and upholding the merit system, Mr. Steward is still an active fighter for Government employes. He was born in Chattanooga, Tenn., but is now a citizen of Missouri. He formerly was in the Railway Mail Service. He married Miss Anne Louise Irvine in 1901 and they have one son, Luther Corwin, jr.

Missouri's chief contribution to literature is Mark Twain, of Hannibal, who immortalized the Mississippi River in his Tom Sawyer stories and "Huckleberry Finn."

Missouri Society.

Vice presidents, Representative Ralph S. Lozier, Mrs. Bessie Parker Brueggeman, of St. Louis, and L. H. Hannah, of Columbia. Mrs. Otis J. Rogers, of Sedalia, is secretary, and W. W. Badgley, of Springfield, is treasurer.

Among other members active in Missouri Society affairs is Mrs. Azalea Badgley, president of the local chapter of the League of American Pen Women.

The society has been actively interested during the last ten years in securing the right to vote by mail. More than 1,500 Missourians live in Washington and are practically disenfranchised through failure of the State Legislature to enact laws, such as 35 other States have passed, providing for absentee voting.

A law authorized by an amendment of the Missouri constitution says:

"The Legislature is hereby authorized and directed to enact proper and suitable laws providing means and methods by which an absentee qualified elector may vote an absentee ballot at all elections by the people whether such absentee elector be within or without this State."

In January, 1925, an absentee voters' bill was introduced, but was lost in legislative congestion. In January, 1929, a similar bill passed the House but failed to pass the Senate. Again in 1931 such a bill passed the House with 107 for and 3 against. Senator Crouse recommended that it pass with Senate committee amendment, but it was not reached in the Senate before adjournment.

Among those who have worked during the ten years on this project are the late Edward R. Williams, C. H. Harwood, Miss Inez Justus (*), Mrs. Adah R. Reddish and Miss Beryl Ingram.

Fish and game abound in the southern portion of Missouri. The section of the Ozarks there was immortalized in Harold Bell Wright's "Shepherd of the Hills" and may be justly termed a hunter's paradise.

Kansas City, with a metropolitan population of 608,500 in 1930, has been called the city of conventions Convention Hall has a seating capacity of 10,000 and the American Royal Exposition Building seats 12,000. A new $4,500,000 auditorium is under construction.

The State university is at Columbia. There are also 12 colleges and seven normal schools in the State. In 1930 school expenses totaled $55,906,799.

Emperor of America.

If America had been founded as a monarchy with George Washington as King, and his crown had been handed down in hereditary succession, Thornton Augustin Washington, of Garden City, would be king of the United States today.

Instead of living largely upon charity in a cottage, his home would be the White House in the city of his own name. Too old to work, this nearest living kin to the "Father of His Country" receives county assistance.

Had George Washington been the first of an American dynasty, America would have had six kings or emperors. When he died the crown would have gone to his next of kin, his brother Samuel. The third king would have been Samuel's eldest son, Thornton. The fourth king would have been Thornton's eldest son, John; the fifth, John's son, Daniel; and the sixth, the Missourian, Thornton Augustin Washington.

The Bagnell Dam across the Osage River, in the Ozarks, was completed in 1931, forming the largest artificial lake in the world. It is 129 miles long with a shore line of approximately 1,500 miles. More than 60,000 acres were flooded. It was designed to supply 400,000,000 kilowatt hours of power to nearby cities.

It's a Great Town.

St. Louis, with a population of 1,039,823 in 1930, is the seventh largest city in America. Its many boot and shoe factories cause this to be one of the leading industries in the State. Its postal receipts rank fifth in the country. St. Louis is noted for its Botanical Garden, its beautiful parks and miles of fine boulevards.

The public school system of St. Louis is one of the best in America and many other cities have used it as a model. Washington and St. Louis Universities are located there. A handsome civic center, costing $6,000,000, is nearing completion.

The late William Rockhill Nelson, owner of the Kansas City Star, provided in his will for a fund of $12,000,000 for the purchase of objects of art. The magnificent Nelson Gallery of Art was erected at a cost of $3,000,000 from the fund.

Large quantities of coal, iron, lead and zinc are mined in the southern sections near Carthage and Joplin. Carthage is also famous for its fine limestone. Missouri produces 40 per cent of all lead mined in America.

Death Brings Parrot Ban.

Pittsburgh, March 15 (AP).—The death of a woman store clerk, attributed to psittacosis or parrot fever, today resulted in a quarantine in Pittsburgh on all parrots, parrakeets and birds of that family.

The most famous living Missourian and a typical youth and girl in Federal service are shown above. Gen. John J. Pershing was born in Linn County and is a graduate of the Missouri grade schools and holds an A.B. degree from Kirksville Normal School. James Alfred Kime, of Tarkio, is a junior chemist at Food and Drug Administration, Agriculture. Mr. Kime holds a B.S. degree from Tarkio College and an A.M. from George Washington University. He is an Alpha Chi Sigma and member of American Chemical Society and a Tarkio three-letter man. Miss Ethel Rogers, of Sedalia, is employed at Dairy Division, Agriculture. Miss Rogers is a member of the P. E. O. Club and attended West High School here. She is prominent in Missouri Society activities.

THE BUNGLE FAMILY Admiration for a Neighbor By Harry J. Tuthill

SHE KNOWS WHO WE ARE BUT WE DON'T KNOW WHO SHE IS. A FINE SITUATION.
SHE DIDN'T ASK TO SEE HIM. OR HOW HE WAS. JUST PUSHED THE ENVELOPE WITH THE MONEY IN IT INTO MY HAND AND SKIPPED DOWNSTAIRS.
YOU SAY BUZZER NEXTDOOR SAW HER?
REG U.S. PAT OFF
HE NOT ONLY SAW HER BUT I JUST KNOW FROM THE WAY HE CLOSED HIS DOOR SOFTLY THAT HE LISTENED TO EVERYTHING SHE OR I SAID.
THAT BABY DOESN'T HAVE TO LISTEN. DEDUCTIONS TELLS HIM ALL.
ONE LOOK PROBABLY TOLD HIM MORE THAN AN AVERAGE PERSON WOULD GET IN ASKING QUESTIONS FOR HOURS.
OH GEORGE I HAVE ENOUGH ON MY MIND WITHOUT YOU INVITING A MAN WHO, AS HIS WIFE ADMITS, IS A BORN RUBBERNECK, TO PRY INTO OUR AFFAIRS.

THE WRITERS DECIDED NOT TO LET JOE KNOW BEFORE THE FIGHT WHO DYNAMITE'S FIFTH OPPONENT WAS TO BE ... THEY TOLD JOE IT WOULD ONLY WORRY HIM .. AND DYNAMITE ... BUT JOE WANTS TO KNOW .....
Reg U S Pat Off., © 1934 by United Feature Syndicate, Inc
COME ON, CLIFF... SPILL IT... WHO'S THIS FIFTH GUY THAT'S GONNA BE SUCH BAD NEWS FOR DYNAMITE?
WELL, JOE ... IF YOU'VE GOT TO KNOW ... IT'S KARL FUNKEL
KARL FUNKEL? ... I NEVER HEARD OF HIM
SURE YOU HAVE, JOE .. ONLY MAYBE NOT BY THAT NAME ...
... YOU SEE, IN THE RING THEY CALL HIM KARL THE BUTCHER
HOW COME THEY CALL HIM THAT? ... ON ACCOUNT O' WHAT HE DONE BEFORE HE STARTED FIGHTIN'?
NO... ON ACCOUNT OF WHAT HE'S DONE SINCE HE STARTED FIGHTIN'!

Walt Mason, Himself

Wet Blanket.

"It is indeed a lovely day," I said to Hiram Hupp; "and everything is blithe and gay, and strictly right side up. A day like this," I said, "in truth is antidote to care, for it renews an old man's youth and stops his falling hair. A day like this," I said, "by jing, is gorgeous, fair and fine, and men who will not dance and sing can't rank as friends of mine." "The day's all right," said Hiram Hupp, that dreariest of men, as gloomy as a poisoned pup, or as a moistened hen. "The day's all right, but it's a freak, and I'm not glad and gay; before the middle of next week there will be heck to pay. The day is pleasant, nice and and warm, but it's a one-night stand, and all the signs portend a storm that will o'erwhelm the land. A wind is coming from the east, all loaded down with snow, to put a crimp in man and beast, and fill our hearts with woe. You are indeed a merry soul to chirp and shortie thus, but when you have to buy more coal you'll stand around and cuss. And every time I go abroad to cheer my fellow gents, I meet some sour and sad old fraud who worries and laments. I never try to smile and sing but some one comes along, a grouchy argument to spring, and spoil my cheer-up song.
